QUIET IN THE SUBURBS.

The conflict between the military and the mob in Second-avenue, on Thursday night, proved, as has been anticipated, to be the decisive struggle between anarchy and order, and yesterday morning beheld a restoration of peace and quiet throughout the length and breadth of the City. Nearly all kinds of business was resumed, and, except for the military precautions observable around the theatres of the late riots, a stranger would not have mistrusted that there had been any departure from the usual serenity of the Metropolis. Toward noon, the following proclamation was issued from the Mayor's Office, and was felt to embody a much nearer approach to the actual state of things than the one of similar tenor, issued from the same quarter on Wednesday:

PROCLAMATION FROM THE MAYOR.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, July 17, 1863.

To the citizens of New-York:

The riotous assemblages have been dispersed. Business is running in its usual channels. The various lines of omnibusses, railways and telegraphs have resumed their ordinary operations. Few symptoms of disorder remain, except in a small district in the eastern part of the City, comprising a part of the Eighteenth and Twenty-first Wards. The police are everywhere alert. A sufficient military force is now here to suppress any illegal movement, however, formidable.

Let me exhort you, therefore, to pursue your ordinary business. Avoid especially all crowds. Remain quietly at your homes, except when engaged in business or assisting the authorities in some organized force. When the military appear in the streets, do not gather about it, being sure that it is doing its duty in obedience to orders from superior authority. Your homes and your places of business you have a right to defend, and it is your duty to defend them at all hazards. Yield to no intimidation and to no demand for money as the price of your safety. If any person woo warns you to desist from your accustomed business, give no heed to the warning, but arrest the person and bring him to the nearest Station-house for punishment as a conspirator.

Be assured that the public authorities have the ability and the will to protect you from those who have conspired alike against your peace, against the Government of your choice, and against the laws which your representatives have enacted.

GEORGE OPDYKE, Mayor.

THE BATTLE-GROUND OF THURSDAY NIGHT.

The east side of the town yesterday was quiet during the day, though there was discoverable among the little crowds of men which dotted the First and Second avenues in the morning a sufficient degree of suppressed riotous feeling to give rise to the impression that by evening it might develop into something dangerous.

The Seventh Regiment were on guard, a portion patroling the avenues and the streets above Twenty-third and squads, in company with policemen, engaged in searching the houses for weapons. A very considerable number of muskets, pistols, clubs, &c., were captured and stowed away in a wagon which accompanied the searching parties. In Thirty-third-street a portion of a company were placed guard to two pieces of artillery. Between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets another company were drawn up along the railroad track. These streets were picketed, and no one allowed to pass from one avenue to the other without showing some evident necessity for so doing. The presence of the soldiers did not seem to excite any great degree of curiosity among the people, who seemed inclined to keep them at a safe distance. No opposition was offered to their operations, and the avenues were very quiet. The cars made their usual trips without any disturbance. About Twentieth and Twenty-sixth streets and Gramercy Park there was a strong guard, composed of detachments of the Sixty-fifth regiment and the Fourteenth cavalry, supporting a brass howitzer from the Eighth New-York battery. The howitzer was stationed in Twenty-first-street between Third-avenue and Gramercy Park, facing the east. In the Park a portion of the Fourteenth cavalry were bivouacked, and the horses nibbled the carefully tended grass of that exclusive breathing place.

AFFAIRS AT THE MILITARY HEAD-QUARTERS.

GEN. BROWN RELIEVED—GEN. CANBY TAKES COMMAND—MORE TROOPS ARRIVED.

Gens. WOOL and KILPATRICK, Gov. SEYMOUR and Mayor OPDYKE were in consultation at the head-quarters at the St. Nicholas Hotel, yesterday morning. It was generally considered that the rioters had reached the length of their rope, and that hereafter the military force already here, and that which is to arrive, will be able to keep down all further demonstrations of the insurgents. A thorough organization of the military, including the infantry, cavalry, and artillery, has been effected, and positions assigned to each company and regiment. By to-day a general rendezvous will be established, so that in event of an emergency a sufficient force can be immediately dispatched to the place of disturbance.

THE CAVALRY.

Yesterday morning Gen. KILPATRICK entered upon the duties he voluntarily took upon himself the day previous. All the cavalry organizations are under his command. In compliance with his request, several citizens reported themselves ready for cavalry service yesterday. They were directed to proceed to Madison-square, where they would be furnished with the necessary equipments. The chief difficulty has been in obtaining a sufficient number of horses, but proper measures have been taken to have a supply here within the next twelve hours.

GEN. CANBY IN COMMAND.

By order of the Secretary of War, Brig.-Gen. E. R. S. CANBY has been appointed to relieve Gen. BROWN of the command of the New-York forces. Gen. CANBY was born in the State of Kentucky, and entered the Military Academy in 1836, and graduated in June, 1839. He is about 40 years of age.

He was promoted on the 1st of July, 1839, to the rank of Second Lieutenant of the United States Infantry, and on the 18th of June, 1846, was promoted to the First Lieutenancy. During that year he held the regimental Adjutancy, and on the 3d of March, 1847, was appointed as Assistant Adjutant-General, with the brevet rank of Captain on the Staff. He was brevetted Major in August, 1840, for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Contreras and Cherubusco, in Mexico, and was also distinguished in the battle of Cerro Gordo. This brevet rank dated from August 20, 1847.

In March, 1851, he was further brevetted a Lieutenant-Colonel, for gallant conduct at the Belen Gate—the brevet dating from Sept. 13, 1847. He held these ranks while in the Adjutant-General's Department. In June, 1851, he was promoted to the full rank of Captain of the Second United States Infantry and relinquished his rank in the line.

On the 3d of March he was appointed Major of the Tenth Infantry, which position he held in the Army Register of January, 1861. On the 14th of May, 1861, he was further promoted to the Colonelcy of the newly formed Nineteenth regiment of United States infantry, and on the 19th of November was assigned to the charge of the Department of New-Mexico.

On the 26th of March, 1862, Gen. CANBY fought a large body of Texans at Apache Pass.

On the 25th of March, he defeated the rebels at Pigeon's Ranche, again in the early part of April, at Galesto, and subsequently about the middle of May, he defeated the rebels at Pieretto, which he completely routed and broke up the rebel army in New-Mexico; they abandoned all the fortifications which they had erected, in anticipation of an overwhelming victory.

Gen. CANBY has established his headquarters at the Central Office. Upon assuming command, he issued the following order:

HEADQUARTERS OF UNITED STATES TROOPS, CITY AND HARBOR OF NEW-YORK, July 17, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 1.—Under the instructions of the Secretary of War, and of the order of the Major General, commanding the Department of the East, the undersigned assumes command of the United States troops in the city and harbor of New-York.

Special reports addressed to Adjt.-Gen. [illegible], Assistant General, will be made at once from the stations and detachments within the limits of this command. These reports will give the strength, state of discipline, supplies, and everything that relates to the welfare of the several commands. In the case of deficiency in addition to the guard, the number of convalescents capable of doing duty, will be reported. The arrival of all troops will be immediately reported, and the report in each case will be accompanied by a statement of the strength, condition and immediate location.

All officers in this City on duty, or on leave, unless they have immediate orders of a superior will report by letter to this office the nature of their duty and their address.

A. P. FISKE, A. A. G.

LAWRENCE KIPP, Major and A. D. C.

Later in the day the following order, relative to the meeting called by Archbishop HUGHES, was also issued:

HEADQUARTERS U. S. TROOPS, CITY AND HARBOR OF NEW-YORK, July 17, 1863.

ORDER No. 2.—The Commanders of detachments of United States troops in the City are informed that the meeting at the house of Archbishop HUGHES is intended to keep order and law.

They will be careful not to molest persons passing to and from it, and to pay no attention to harsh words—only interfering when actual force or violence occurs.

By order of Brig.-Gen. E. R. S. CANBY,

A. P. FISKE, Assistant-Adjutant General.

The order was issued simultaneously to both the Military and Police.

Upon retiring rom his office Gen. BROWN issued the annexed farewell order:

NEW-YORK, July 17, 1863.

In obedience to instructions from the Secretary of War, the undersigned relinquishes the command of the United States troops in the City and harbor of New-York.

In parting from the troops of his command in the harbor, he desires to express his sense of their uniform good and soldierly conduct, and he cannot separate from those of his immediate connection in the city without his testimony of their bravery, discipline and soldierly department.

Engaged night and day in constant conflict with the mob, they have been in fifteen or twenty severe contests, in most of them outnumbered more than ten to one, many of them being armed, they have whipped and effectually dispersed them, and have been uniformly successful. In not a single instance has assistance been required by the Police when it has not been promptly rendered, and all property, private and public, which has been put under their protection, has been perfectly and efficiently protected, and with pride he desires to record, that in this City, surrounded by grog-shops, but one single instance of drunkenness has fallen under his observation.

To Lieut.-Col. JOHN B. FROTHINGHAM, his able and efficient Adjutant-General, he tenders thanks for his untiring assistance.

Having, during the present insurrection, been in immediate and constant cooperation with it, he desires the privilege of expressing his unbounded admiration of the Police Department of this City. Never in civil or military life has he seen such untiring devotion and such efficient service.

To President ACTON and Commissioner BERGEN he offers his thanks for their courtesy to him and their kindness to his command.

Brevet Brig.-Gen. HARVEY BROWN.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.

The Eighth United States infantry regiment arrived from the Army of the Potomac yesterday. Their temporary quarters are at the Park Barracks. Capt. JOHN HICKS, the Superintendent of the Barracks, gave them a sumptuous dinner, and otherwise provided for them.

The Fifty-fourth regiment, N. Y. N. G., Col. C. H. CLARK, Ex-Mayor of Rochester, and the Thirteenth regiment Volunteer artillery, Col. MARSHALL, U. S. A., left Rochester Thursday, and will probably arrive here early this morning.

ARRIVED.

The Eleventh and Thirteenth New-York regiments, Cols. MAIDHOFF and WOODRUFF, and a battery of six guns of the Fifth New-York regular artillery, from Harrisburgh, arrived in this City last night and reported to Gen. CANBY, at the Central Office.

RELIEVED.

Two companies of the Sixty-fifth New-York regiment, under Col. BEHRENDS, and a portion of the Eighth New-York battery, commanded by Lieut. SMITH, garrisoning JACKSON'S foundery in Twenty-eighth-street, were relieved last night by a portion of the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth New-York Volunteers, under Lieut. SWIFT. The Sixty-fifth were quartered in the Central Market Armory. The Eighth were dismissed until to-day.

THE SEVENTH-AVENUE ARSENAL.

AN INTERVIEW BETWEEN MAJOR-GEN. SANFORD AND GEN. KILPATRICK—A YOUTHFUL PATRIOT—INTERNAL AFFAIRS AT THE ARSENAL—A FALSE ALARM—"ALL QUIET."

Gen. KILPATRICK, who has been given command of all the cavalry, by Gen. WOOL, visited Major-Gen. SANFORD yesterday morning at the Arsenal. The result of the interview did not transpire. It is understood to have been of an important character.

The liquor stores which heretofore have been partially closed, were shut up yesterday morning, by a special order from Major Gen. SANFORD. They have been found a source of great trouble, as the soldiers when off duty perambulating the streets, would "treat," and the result was that the cases of intoxication increased alarmingly.

There is now staying at the Seventh-avenue Arsenal, a lad named EDMON MONCASEY, of Irish birth, who left his native land about five months since to take part in our national struggle. On arriving in New-York, he attached himself to the Eleventh New-York Fire Zouaves, with whom he has been ever since. He converses fluently in French, is well-informed generally, and altogether is a very promising youth. He is, of course, the pet of the regiment, and during the past few days, he has performed valuable services at the arsenal, in running errands, etc. He is a thorough patriot, and his motive in coming to this country was to fight for the Union.

Large numbers of prisoners are captured every day and night. Some are caught along the streets, and others are arrested out by the Citizen Police. These men were brought before Maj.-Gen. SANFORD, where they have a hearing, after which they are sent to the Toombs.

The Sixty-fifth New-York regiment is not at this post, as ordered, but is with Gen. WOOL, commanding the Department of the East. This explains their noncompliance with the commandant's order. The troops at the arsenal are commanded by Col. POSTLY, of the Third New-York cavalry, under the supervision of the commanding General.

Much credit is due to Col. WILCOX, who has been on constant duty since the commencement of the riot, for his admirable management as the executive officer. All the details of duty connected with the arsenal have been under his direction. No such officer as Col. MYERS has at any time commanded the forces here, and the report in several cotemporaries to that effect is erroneous. Among the officers stationed here, the following were not mentioned in our report in yesterday's TIMES: Col. C. W. DARLING, formerly Aid-de-Camp to Gen. MORGAN; Col. H. MOORE, of the Forty seventh New-York; Maj. FEARING; Maj. KIERNANT, and Adjt. FERGUSON, all of whom have performed some very arduous duties, having been on constant service night and day since Monday last.

Yesterday morning a man residing near Sing Sing, while walking to this City, was attacked by three rowdies, two of whom he shot, the third making good his escape. He wore a soldier's coat, and it is supposed this had excited the brutal instincts of the rowdies. He called upon Major-Gen. SANDFORD and narrated the facts of the case, and was complimented for his brave conduct.

Yesterday, at about 3 P. M., intelligence reached the Arsenal that the mob, who had been listening to Archbishop HUGHES' speech, was coming in the direction of that place. Orders were given to "fall in," and, in less time than it takes to write these lines, the street in front of the Arsenal was crowded with the soldiery. The cannon were sighted, loaded and manned. But no mob came, and after remaining in position for half an hour, the soldiers were withdrawn, and the pickets resumed their accustomed beats.

The sanitary condition of the troops stationed at the Arsenal is generally good, but some of the soldiers are suffering with the diarrhœa.

Some of the officers stationed here have not slept a whole night since Sunday morning. Hon. RICHARD J. GARRETSON, the efficient Inspector of the Health [illegible]

THE ARCHBISHOP AND HIS FLOCK.

[illegible] Bishop Hughes' Advice to Peter Thumbull [illegible] Mercy and Not Gentleness" [illegible] of the City [illegible]

The citizens of New-York were very generally surprised yesterday morning to find posted in every conspicuous position, and on every omnibus or railroad car, a large placard, on which was printed the following

ADDRESS AND INVITATION.

To the Men of New-York, who are now called in many [illegible] question, and who are [illegible] to the situation in my [illegible] I said yes; but that is not a reason why you [illegible] not say no. I shall, in your whole strength, [illegible] to-morrow, (Friday,) at 3 o'clock to my residence, northeast corner Madison-avenue and Thirty-ninth-street. I shall have a speech prepared for you.

There is abundant space for the meeting around my residence. I can address you from the corner of the balcony. If I should be unable to stand during the delivery, you will permit me to address you sitting; my voice is much stronger than my limbs. I take upon myself the responsibility of assuring you that in paying me this visit, or in retiring from it, you shall not be disturbed by any exhibition of municipal or military presence. You who are Catholic, or as many of you as are, have a right to visit your Bishop without molestation.

† JOHN HUGHES,

Archbishop of New-York.

NEW-YORK, July 16, 1863.

Very many people doubted the authenticity of the document, and argued that in the first place the Archbishop's well-known signature was † JOHN, &c., &c., and not † JOHN HUGHES. They also considered the wording of the invitation not such as one so eminent in the Church, and so influential with his people, would be apt to use in communicating with a body of men, whose actions during the past week have turned our City upside down, and filled its borders with sorrow and vexation. In fact, among the newspaper men and the business community generally, the address was considered to be the emanation of some brain whose sole idea was to get a large crowd in the neighborhood of the Archbishop's house and "sell" them. Others, again, thought it a shrewd device of the authorities to gather the rioters together that they might be nabbed, or possibly fired upon. Whether any of these opinions were based on the facts of the case or not, the following report will determine:

At 1 o'clock P. M., we called upon the Archbishop and found him at work in his office. He stated that the call issued in the morning papers was a genuine one, and that he proposed to address such of his fellow-citizens as should see fit to accept his invitation. His address, he said, was as yet unprepared, or rather it was unwritten, and he should of course be unable to furnish copies to the Press, and indeed the reporters must take their chances with the rest of the people. Satisfied that there was no hoax thus far we went again upon the street, where had by this time collected a crowd of perhaps five or six hundred individuals, of various ages but of one nationality. They were quiet and orderly, but disposed to regard with curious and seeking scrutiny any individual whose taste and purse permitted him the luxury of a whole coat and a clean pair of boots.

As the hour appointed in the call drew near, the crowd increased in numbers, but did not change in appearance. The working element was there in great force, and it was by no means a difficult task for a reporter to gather from the expressions of the crowd the current of their thoughts, or the expected tenor of the Archbishop's address. Free allusion was made to the events of the week, and many comments were made upon the personal appearance of those members of the Press, whose unfortunate luck took them into the hands of the ruffianly mob on Monday and Tuesday last.

Huddled upon the front steps of the Episcopal residence were representatives from every journal of prominence in the City, many women, and a very demonstrative crowd; while in front of the house up and down the avenue stretched a dense mass of men and boys, numbering at least by this time three or four thousand people.

Through the thoughtful courtesy of Mr. O'DONNELL, we were invited to take a position at the window whence the Archbishop would deliver his address.

At precisely 2 o'clock, the Archbishop, clad in purple robes, and decked with the insignia of his position, stepped upon the balcony. His appearance was the signal for immediate, enthusiastic and prolonged applause, after courteously acknowledging which he sat down, apparently overcome by his emotions, the heat, and his severe physical infirmities. For some moments the scene was profoundly impressive. Upon the little balcony, clad in the vestments of clerical rank and power, and surrounded by Very Reverends of high degree and station, sat the man before whose uplifted finger, thousands have bent the knee, and in the street with open eyes and mouths stood in absolute silence a vast multitude whose deeds during the week have made the City tremble and put to the blush the worst days and scenes of revolutionary Europe, waiting anxiously for the word of encouragement, of advice or of rebuke which was soon to come, while upon a neighboring balcony sat one of the highest of our judicial functionaries, prepared to applaud the one as he had already somewhat publicly defended the others.

Having partaken of some slight refreshment, the venerable Priest arose, and removing his cap, bowed courteously to the crowd, while upon the instant, every man in the immense assemblage took off his hat, and the united voice of the upturned faces made the City for squares around resound with hearty greeting and pious applause. Silence having been restored, the Archbishop spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF ARCHBISHOP HUGHES.

MEN OF NEW-YORK: They call you rioters, and I cannot see a riotous face among you. [Cheers.] I call you men of New-York, not gentlemen, because gentlemen is so threadbare a term that it means nothing positive. [Applause.] Give me men, and I know of my own knowledge, that if this City were invaded by a British or any other foreign Power, [laughter,] the delicate ladies of New-York, with infants at their breasts, would look for their protection to men, rather than to gentlemen. [Applause.] Of course, there is no reason why you should not be gentlemen, for there is no real difference between these terms. [Applause.] I address you of my own choice; and I would do so if I had to go on crutches. No one has prompted me to do it. My lungs are stronger than my limbs. If gratifies me that you have met in peace and good order here at this time. This, however, does not surprise me—it is what I expected. I do not address you as the President, [laughter,] or the Governor, or the Mayor, or a military officer. I address you as your father. [Cheers.] [VOICE—You are worth the whole of them.] And I am not going to go into the question, what has brought about this unhappy state of things.

It is not my business to do so, but as far as I am concerned myself, you know that I am a minister of God, and a minister of peace, who in your troubles in years past, as you know, never deserted you. [Cheers, and cries of "No, 'never."] With my tongue and my pen I have stood by you always, and so shall I to the end of my life, so long as you are right, and I sincerely hope that you are not wrong. [Cheers.] I am not a runaway Bishop in times of danger. [A VOICE—"No, you're not like BEECHER."] It has been perhaps a calamity, but I do not regret it, that I never was conscious of the sentiment of fear until the danger was over, and then sometimes I might perhaps get a little nervous. [Cheers.] I could not even in the best of causes, as you know, fight for you.

The course of nature has denied me that privilege, but I can still stand by you, I can still advise you, and, if necessary, I can die with you. [Great cheering.] As I said before, I will not enter into the question which has provoked all this excitement. No doubt there are some real grievances, but still I think that there are many imaginary ones—because in this world everything is comparative in its nature. There are no people in the world that have not some cause of grievance, and there are few that have not greater cause for complaint than we can complain of, after all. [Cheers.] Everything is comparative, and a change is not always an improvement.

When I cast my thoughts back to the land of my forefathers, and when I think of its desolation; when I see the fertile west and south of Ireland depopulated and cattle browsing on the ruins of the cottages of the noble race that once lived there, I thank God that I was permitted to be among those who had an opportunity of coming to this country, where at least no such wretched tyranny is practiced [great cheering]. If you are Irishmen, and the papers say the rioters are all Irishmen, then I also am an Irishman, [tremendous applause] but not a rioter, for I am a man of peace. If you are Catholics, as they have said, probably to wound my feelings, then I also am a Catholic [cheers.]

I know that men are sometimes liable to get excited from an apprehension of danger, and I myself, as your Bishop, have had my own troubles and my perturbations, but I think it is the best policy to bear with patiently the more especially when they are only temporary and will soon pass away. I agree with the poet, that it is far better for us to bear our little inconveniences here than to rush into evils we know not of. In Europe, where most of the countries are despotic—yes, even in England, [groans,] where they have a Constitution, they are none the less despotic—and a ruler is a ruler by right, whether he be a fool or a wise man, and must occupy the throne while he lives. There is no relief there for an oppressed people, except in revolution. Revolution in any country is a desperate state, and I know of no country where it could be in worse taste than here.

In this country the Constitution gives the right to the people to make a revolution every four years. [Cheers.] But it it a different kind of a revolution. The battles of our revolutions are not battles of blood and violence, nor are the bullets bullets of lead. You know what they do. They are paper bullets. Were you ever in Rome walking on the Corso during the Carnival? The people throw bullets—pellets of flour and perhaps gilded at each other. But in this country the Government is a foundation not to be destroyed. It is the right of the people every four years to correct or amend, as the printers say, the superstructure. We have the right to approve or disapprove the acts of our rulers, but not to override them. But let us preserve the foundation, and let the American people rebuild the superstructure every four years.

If you take away the foundation, what have you, what have I, to cling to. What should we have remaining in the form of human government? I am too old now to seek another home or country, and I shall cling to the old foundation. I want the housekeepers to mind. [A Voice—"And let the niggers keep South."] Everything is in the hands of the supreme people of the United States, and the majority of them, whether they make a blunder or not, I am willing to be governed by. Now, gentlemen, [laughter,] I am nearly done.

There is one thing, however, I must say. I wish to ask you a question, and I wish you to answer it, and if I should ask your counsel on another point I know you will give it to me. ["We will, we will."] Are you willing that I should give you a word of advice. [Cries of "Yes, yes," and cheers.] I have not scolded you, and I hope you do not deserve it. I repeat what I said before, that I have not seen in this vast audience a countenance which I could call the countenance of a rioter. ["That's so."]

Then, is this business to go on? Should not every man in his own modest way become a preserver of the peace? I am told in the papers, that not a little property has been destroyed. I remember the anecdote of a lady who said to her child, come, my darling, come with me to Church. The child answered, what's the use, mamma. Well, that was a child's answer, and I hope he has seen the folly of it, if he has grown up, but now if property is destroyed, what is the use? It must be paid for by you and by me. No, no, but if property is lost it can be repaired or restored. But who can bring back an immortal soul? In the case of a violent and unjust assault on you without provocation, my notion is that every man has a right to defend his house or his shanty at the risk of his life. [Cheers.] The cause, however, must be just. It must be aggressive not offensive. Do you want my advice? ["Yes."] I have been hurt by the reports that you are rioters.

You cannot imagine that I could hear these things without being pained grievously. Is there not some way by which you can stop these proceedings, and support the laws, of which none have been enacted against you as Irishmen and Catholics? You have suffered enough already. No Government can stand or protect itself, unless it protects its citizens. Military force will be let loose on you, and you know what that is. The innocent will be shot down, and the guilty likely to escape. Would it not be better for you to retire quietly? not to give up your principles or convictions, [immense cheers,] but to keep out of the crowd where immortal souls are launched into eternity, and at all events get into no trouble till you are at home. Would it not be better? There is one thing in which I would ask your advice. When these so-called riots are over and the blame is justly laid on Irish Catholics, I wish you to tell me in what country I could claim to be born? [VOICES—Ireland.]

Yes, but what shall I say if these stories be true? Ireland, that never committed a single act of cruelty until she was oppressed. Ireland, that has been the mother of heroes and poets, but never the mother of cowards. [Great applause.] When the first Apostle, St. Patrick, went to Ireland, he was preceded by Polladorus, and they listened to him as you now patiently listen to me. The soil of Ireland was never soiled by a single drop of martyr's blood. It would touch me deeply to have to reverse that record. Perhaps you consider this a touch of blarney, but I assure you it is the truth. [Cries of "It is, God bless you."]

The delicacy of feeling in Ireland is very great. You know that Ireland sometimes produces idiots, not many of them, however, [laughter,] but the delicacy of the people is such that they call them "innocents" and not idiots. Well, once there was a poor child in this way, and you know these people are not accountable for what they do, and he was very fond of raw eggs, which he took and ate on all occasions. Sometimes they were not so fresh as they might be, [laughter;] and one time, as he was swallowing his favorite beverage, he heard a chicken squeak in his throat. "Ah, my little fellow," said he, "I am very sorry, but you spoke too late," and down it went. But, as I said before, there are very few of that sort in Ireland. Oh! my friends, what a scene rises before me as I think of that land of my nativity, and as I glance at the long list of noble men who are exiled from their homes—such men as Field-Marshal NUGENT, whom I knew intimately, and the O'DONNELLS of Spain; when I know that most of the colleges have been established by the sons of Ireland; when I know that in later days the blood of your brothers have filled the fields of the Crimea and Balaklava, and of Delhi in India; when I think of the Government which has persecuted them, leaving nothing for them but the United States—when I think of this, I do not envy the policy of John Bull, which replaces a noble population by a set of fat bullocks. [Laughter.] I took upon myself to say that you should not be molested in paying me a visit. [Cheers.] I thank you for your kindness—[applause]—and I hope nothing will occur till you return home; and if by chance, as you go thither, you should meet a police officer, or a military man, why just—look at him. [Tremendous laughter and applause.]

The crowd cheered vociferously, and demanded the presence of the Archbishop again upon the balcony. He gratified them, bowed his thanks, and returned to his parlor, quite exhausted and greatly fatigued by the long standing and excitement.

After a while the crowd slowly dispersed, arguing among themselves as to what the Archbishop meant to have them do, some insisting that he refused to recognize them as rioters, and therefore they had done right; while others insisted that the venerable and suffering Priest intended to convey to them the wish that they should return to their homes and their work, and take things as they found them in their naturalized country—the land popularly supposed to be only the "home of the brave, and the land of the free."

ACCIDENTS AND INCIDENTS.

CHRISTIAN MANCY, a German aged 35 years, was found in Sixty-fourth-street, by Officer SMITH, suffering from a gunshot wound. He was taken to the Hospital in a dying condition.

At 8½ o'clock on Thursday night, a band of about one hundred men attempted to take possession of the Thirty-first Precinct Station-house in Eighty-sixth-street, near the Bloomingdale road. The building was so well guarded that the crowd were dispersed after having sacked and plundered several private residences in the vicinity.

The Twenty-seventh Precinct Police reported that on Thursday information was conveyed to them that CHAS. JACKSON, who jumped into the North River at Pier No. 4 to evade the fury of the mob, as reported in yesterday's TIMES, was under the pier, and had been there secreted for ten hours. Officers HAY, MCCUSKER and DARRON, rescued him and put him on board the police boat. JACKSON says the mob attacked him in West-street and attempted to murder him, and that after throwing himself into the river he crawled under the pier and lay on a pile of stones all night.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock on Thursday night, a man named LOVE, residing at No. 201 Sixth-avenue, was shot in the leg, and seriously injured by the accidental discharge of a musket.

At 12 o'clock on Thursday afternoon all the orphans from the Colored Orphan Asylum left the Twentieth Precinct Station-house, under a strong escort of military and police. They took a steamboat at the foot of Thirty-fourth-street for Blackwell's Island. The Twentieth Precinct had accommodated these orphans in the best way they could since the burning of their Asylum on Monday.

NOBLE CONDUCT.

On Monday afternoon last, a stalwart, fine-looking colored man was espied crossing Park-row into Beekman-street, where he was set upon by the gang of rowdies who then infested that locality. He was chased as far as No. 5 Beekman-street, when the mob surrounded him, and commenced maltreating him shamefully, when Mr. PERKINS, one of the editors of the Independent, who was looking out of one of the windows at the time, rushed down stairs, dashed in among the rioters, and placed himself before the colored man. Mr. PERKINS, having a knowledge of the "noble art of self-defence," administered several telling blows on the foremost of the rioters, and before "letting up," it is said, he had knocked down five sturdy men. The negro was then conveyed to a place of safety, the mob being kept at bay in the meantime by Mr. PERKINS.

ANOTHER RINGLEADER ARRESTED.

Capt. MOUNT and Officer SHANGLE of the Eleventh, yesterday morning arrested a man named DANIEL SULLIVAN, a ringleader of the rioters who carried on their operations on the East side of the town, between First and Thirteenth streets. When arrested he was at work piling lumber on the Eighth-street dock. After taking him into custody the officers searched his residence at No. 163 Avenue A, and found a horse-pistol, a bayonet and two Sharpe's rifles, which had been taken from the armory at the corner of Twenty-second-street and Second-avenue, during the riot at that place on Tuesday. The rifles were wrapped in cloth and secreted between two beds. SULLIVAN, when arrested, offered to join the United States service if Capt. MOUNT would not prefer the rather of "rioting against him," but this he failed to fully accomplish, and the "enormity" of his guilt and was very penitent. He is now locked up at the Central Office.

THE PARK DEFENCES—COL. ADAMS.

The military defences in and around the City Hall Park and vicinity during the week have been under the charge of Col. J. W. ADAMS, formerly of the First Brooklyn regiment. Col. ADAMS had a most arduous and difficult duty, in what was really the most important and most threatened district of the city, as well as the region where the riot first assumed shape. The duties moreover, were a kind which few men, though they might be most excellent soldiers in the field, were qualified to perform. But his West Point education, his practical experience in handling men and guns, his sagacity, his fertility of resource, his tirelessness, his earnestness in the work, enabled him to overcome all obstacles; and the best encomium upon the manner in which he performed his work lies in the fact, that not a rioter dared to show his head or raise his hand after Col. ADAMS had assumed command of the post. To an old soldier, who has led his regiment in many battles, and who achieved the highest distinction at Fair Oaks and other hard-fought fields, there may seem little glory in contending with a mob as dastardly as that which ruled our city for four days; but duty is duty, and the cause of good government and civil order for which he and all of us fight, may be as honorably served in the streets and squares of New-York as on the heroic fields of Virginia. Every one who does business, or has residence in the vicinity of the Park and in the lower section of the City, owes a debt of gratitude to Col. ADAMS.

A LOGICAL INFERENCE.

Judge TANEY'S notorious decision that "negroes have no rights which white men are bound to respect," received a curious and perfectly logical illustration during the progress of the riot in Harlem. A man was seized and brought before Justice WELCH on a charge of invading the domicile of a respectable mulatto woman and attempting to destroy her goods. The woman testified that on the entrance of the rowdy he addressed her as follows: "The Constitution says that you can break into the house of a nigger, you can rob a nigger, you can burn his house and then you can kill the nigger!" He was proceeding to do so when the entrance of the Police interrupted this constitutional invader of the rights of law-abiding citizens.

INCENDIARISM OF THE RIOT.

ESTIMATE OF LOSSES.

The following list, compiled by Fire Marshal BAKER, comprises all the principal losses by fire growing out of the riot. The total damage done by the incendiaries during the four days, commencing on Monday, is estimated at $400,000.

MONDAY, July 13—11:05 A. M.—No. 677 Third-avenue, Provost-Marshal JENKINS' enrolling office. Three buildings destroyed. Total loss about $25,000.

3:05 P. M.—Lexington-avenue, between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth streets. Two brown stone buildings and their contents, valued at $28,000, totally destroyed.

4:35 P. M.—Forty-fourth-street, between Fourth and Fifth avenues—Bull's Head Hotel, owned by Mr. ALLERTON. Totally destroyed, with contents. Loss, $20,000.

6:50 P. M.—Fifth-avenue, between Forty-third and Forty-fourth streets—Colored Orphan Asylum, large three-story brick building, totally destroyed. Loss $35,000.

8:18 P. M.—No. 429 Grand-street—Enrolling Office and dwelling of Provost-Marshal JOHN DUFFY, sacked and burned. Loss $10,000.

9:20 P. M.—No. 62 Roosevelt-street—Frame dwelling, occupied by colored people. Damage $100.

4:50 P. M.—A five-story brick building, northeast corner of Twenty-first-street and Second-avenue, used for manufacturing firearms, by MARSTON & Co., totally destroyed, with contents. Loss $75,000.

5:15 P. M.—No. 1,190 Broadway—Provost-Marshal B. F. MANNIERE'S Enrolling Office. Twelve buildings destroyed, being the whole block in Broadway, from Twenty-eighth to Twenty-ninth streets. Total value, including contents, $125,000.

9:37 P. M.—Eighty seventh-street, residence of Postmaster WAKEMAN totally destroyed. Loss $25,000. The Twenty-third Precinct Police Station-house, directly in rear of Eighty sixth-street, caught fire from sparks, and was also destroyed. Loss $15,000.

TUESDAY, July 14—3:30 A. M.—One Hundred and Twenty-ninth-street, corner of Third-avenue, six frame buildings burned. Total value $22,000.

12:22 P. M.—Eleventh-avenue and Forty-first-street, hotel owned by Mr. ALLERTON, brick building, destroyed. Loss about $15,000.

3:04 P. M.—Weehawken Ferry-house, foot of Forty-second-street, North River. Loss $6,000.

5:03 P. M.—Nos. 73 and 75 Roosevelt-street. Two dwellings occupied by colored families. Totally destroyed. Loss $3,000.

11 P. M.—No. 163 East Twenty-second-street, Eighteenth Precinct Station-house; also, the fire-alarm bell-tower and No. 51 engine house, all destroyed. Loss $20,000.

11:45 P. M.—No. 24 East Thirty-third-street—dwelling-house of Mr. JARED W. PECK, Port Warden. A library valued at $5,000 destroyed. The building damaged to the amount of $1,000.

WEDNESDAY, July 15.—2:40 A. M.—Avenue C, corner of Fourteenth-street, lumber yard of OGDEN & Co. Damage about $2,000.

10:50 A. M.—No. 91 West Thirty-second-street, three brick buildings, occupied as tenement houses by colored people; all destroyed. Loss $15,000.

In addition to the above, other fires occurred, but the damage in all these cases was slight.

INQUESTS UPON THE DEAD.

A COLORED MAN IS DRIVEN TO DESPAIR AND SUICIDE.

Coroner NAUMANN held an inquest yesterday on the body of WM. HENRY YATES, a colored man, 41 years of age, who committed suicide at the house of his employer, JAMES MARTIN, in Madison-street, by first cutting his throat, and then hanging himself to a cellar door by means of a small cord. The deceased resided in Water-street, and when the houses of the colored people were attacked by the mob on Thursday night, he undertook to defend his wife and children. The resistance which he offered was such as to excite them to the highest pitch, and many swore that he should be burned alive if caught. He secreted his family in the best way possible, and when resistance became hopeless he ran to the house of his employer where he was soon after found dead in the condition above stated.

Coroner WILDEY held an inquest, at No. 163 East Twenty-sixth-street, on the body of MARY CORCORAN, aged 24 years, who was shot by the military while engaged in suppressing a riot on Thursday last. Deceased was standing on the walk when one of the rioters fired a pistol at the soldiers. The fire was returned, and this woman with several others, whose names we could not learn, were almost instantly killed.

JAMES BRODERICK, of No. 176 East Thirty-first-street, died from the effects of a gunshot wound, received at a riot in Ninth-avenue.

HENRY GETZ was shot in the abdomen at the same time and place, and died from his wounds yesterday afternoon.

Coroner RANNEY held inquests yesterday upon the bodies of quite a number who died from gunshot wounds and other injuries.

DELIA LAWRENCE, aged 26 years, was shot in the collision in Tenth-avenue and Forty-first-street.

The names of GARVEY, CARMODY, CASEY and GARRETTY are also reported at the Coroners' office, as having died from gunshot wounds received from the military at the place last named. The soldiers were ordered to the place to disperse the mob engaged in plundering and burning buildings.

Large crowds of men, women and children were in the streets, and when the military made their appearance a furious storm of all kinds of missiles was showered upon them. The populace were repeatedly warned and besought to retire to their houses and remain there, but no attention was paid to the officers; on the contrary, the stones and brickbats came faster than ever. Several soldiers were knocked down and terribly bruised before the order to fire was given. These are facts which have been testified to is hereunto annexed, marked A. I also sent to the Admiral, to be forwarded, another in the same language, addressed to the officer in command of the United States forces at Fortress Monroe. The gunboat proceeded immediately to the Minnesota with these dispatches, while the Torpedo remained at anchor. Between 3 and 4 o'clock P. M. another boat came up to us, bearing the Admiral's answer, which is hereunto annexed, marked B.

We remained at or about this point in the river until the 6th instant, when, having heard nothing further from the Admiral, at 12 o'clock M. on that day I directed Lieut. DAVIDSON again to speak the gunboat on guard, and to hand to the officer in command another note to the Admiral. This was done. A copy of the note is appended, marked C. At 2½ o'clock P. M. two boats approached us from below, one bearing an answer from the Admiral to my note to him of the 4th. This answer is annexed, marked D.

The other boat bore the answer of Lieut.-Col. W. H. LUDLOW to my note of the 4th, addressed to the officer in command at Fort Monroe. A copy of this is annexed, marked E. Lieut.-Col. LUDLOW also came up in person in the boat that brought his answer to me and conferred with Col. OULD, on board the Torpedo, upon some matters he desired to see him about in connection with the exchange of prisoners. From the papers appended, embracing the correspondence referred to, it will be seen that the mission failed from the refusal of the enemy to receive or entertain it, holding the proposition for such a conference "inadmissible."

The influences and views that led to this determination after so long a consideration of the subject, must be left to conjecture. The reason assigned for the refusal by the United States Secretary of War, to wit: that "the customary agents and channels" are considered adequate for all needful military "communications and conferences," to one acquainted with the facts, seems not only unsatisfactory, but very singular and unaccountable; for it is certainly known to him that these very agents to whom he evidently alludes, heretofore agreed upon in a former conference in reference to the exchange of prisoners, (one of the subjects embraced in your letter to me,) are now, and have been for some time, directly at issue on several important points. The existing cartel, owing to those disagreements, is virtually suspended, so far as the exchange of officers on either side is concerned. Notices of retaliation have been given on both sides.

The effort, therefore for the very many and cogent reasons set forth in your letter of instructions to me, to see if these differences could not be removed, and if a clearer understanding between the parties as to the general conduct of the war could not be arrived at before this extreme measure should be resorted to by either party, was no less in accordance with the dictates of humanity than in strict conformity with the usages of belligerents in modern times. Deeply impressed as I was with these views and feelings, in undertaking the mission, and asking the conference, I can but express my profound regret at the result of the effort made to obtain it, and I can but entertain the belief that if the conference sought had been granted, mutual good could have been effected by it; and if this war, so unnatural, so unjust, so unchristian, and inconsistent with every fundamental principle of American constitutional liberty, "must needs" continue to be waged against us, that at least some of its severer horrors, which now so eminently threaten, might have been avoided.

Very respectfully,
ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURGH.

REPORTS FROM WOUNDED ARRIVED AT RICHMOND.

From the Richmond Sentinel July 13.

We have received some highly interesting information from some of the wounded, who arrived in this city Saturday and yesterday, relative to the battle of Gettysburgh. We give below some of the particulars gleaned in conversation with them:

DESCRIPTION OF FRIDAY'S FIGHT—THE FIRST VIRGINIA REGIMENT AT GETTYSBURGH.

Much interest is felt by the public in the fate of the First Virginia regiment, which was organized in this City, and a large number of families here are interested in the fate of its members. The first report from it after the battle of Gettysburgh was the old story of "cut all to pieces," and we deeply regret to announce that in the case of this gallant regiment the report is too true. The regiment, numbering about 200 men, the remnant of the fine body that left this city in April, 1861, is attached to KEMPER'S brigade, in PICKETT'S division of LONGSTREET'S corps. It had been near Chambersburgh doing picket duty, but had been relieved, and on Thursday, the 2d inst., marched 22 miles to Gettysburgh, and went into bivouac near the town. Gettysburgh was the right of the enemy's centre, and was, of course, the left of our centre. The battle-field, as viewed from our line, may be described thus: From Gettysburgh there stretches away toward the right a high mountain, on which there is a plateau, defended by a stone fence. This was the enemy's position. On the right of this was another mountain meeting it at right angles, and protruding out toward our lines. This mountain was also fortified and occupied by the enemy, so that if our troops had occupied and held the main position of the Federals they would have been exposed to a murderous enfilading fire from the flanking mountain. The ground in front of the enemy's work was of a rolling formation, requiring our troops first to descend a slope and then ascend to the attack. All this was to be done under fire. Our artillery was massed in front of the mountain, and behind it our infantry was placed.

About 3 o'clock Friday morning the First Virginia was ordered to fall in, and with the division marched to the right of our centre, nearly opposite the flanking mountain, and was placed about 75 yards behind our artillery. The cannonading opened from our side about 1 o'clock, and after two hours' shelling, which was so inaccurate on the part of the enemy that only five men in the First were killed by it, the infantry was ordered to advance. This order was given at 3 o'clock P. M., and the advance was commenced, the infantry marching at common time across the field, and not firing a musket until within 75 yards of the enemy's works. As KEMPER'S brigade moved up it swung around to the left and was exposed to the front fire and flanking fire of the Federals, which was very fatal. This swinging around unmasked a part of the enemy's force, five regiments being pushed out from their left to the attack. Directly this force was unmasked our artillery opened on it with terrible precision. An officer who was within a few yards of the works informs us that our shells were thrown with wonderful accuracy into the very middle of the enemy's column, killing sometimes as many as twenty or thirty at a shot. This force was advancing in column of battalions, and in attempting to change their position, by marching by the right, was thrown into such confusion by the scathing fire of our artillery that the slaughter was still more terrible. They never rallied, and their five regimental flags were scattered all about in the crowd. This demonstration on the offensive being dispersed, our infantry continued their advance upon the works. When within about seventy-five yards they opened fire, and charged on the force defending the stone fence. As they mounted the fence, two or three hundred of the Yankees defending it threw down their arms and ran toward our men, giving themselves up as prisoners. Many of them ran entirely through KEMPER'S brigade to the rear. A good many of them were killed in running forward to surrender, our men not understanding the meaning of the manœuvre. The Confederates captured the works, but so few of them passed through the deadly fire that not enough got inside to hold them against the large force of Yankees that advanced to retake them.

Seven Confederate flags were planted on the stone fence, but there not being enough men to support them, they were captured by the advancing Yankee force, and nearly all of our severely wounded were left in the hands of the enemy.

The First Virginia carried in 175 men, about 25 having been detailed for ambulance and other duty. They brought out between thirty and forty, many even of them being wounded. There is but one officer of the regiment who was not killed or wounded, and that was Lieut. Ballou, who now commands it. Col. L. B. WILLIAMS went into action on horseback, and was instantly killed. He fell forward on being shot, and did not speak afterward. His horse was hit three times. Col. WILLIAMS' body is in the hands of the enemy. Among the officers we have ascertained the following losses: Company G, Lieut. MORRIS commanding, Capt. LANGLEY was sick, but went into the fight and was wounded; Lieuts. WOODY and MORRIS, all wounded; Company B, (color company,) Capt. DAVIS, wounded and missing; Lieut. PAINE, wounded; Company C, Capt. HALLIMAN and Lieut. DOOLEY, both wounded and missing; Company D, Capt. NORTON, Lieuts. REEVE, KEININGHAM and BLAIR, all wounded; Company H, Capt. WATKINS, Lieuts. CABELL and MARTIN, all wounded; Company I, Lieuts. BALLOU and CABO, the latter wounded. WM. MITCHELL, son of JOHN MITCHELL, in command of the color guard of the regiment, is wounded and missing. Lieut. BLAIR, of Company D, commanded the skirmishers. We have been unable to get a list of the privates killed and wounded.

Many of our wounded were brought back into our lines by the Yankees, who leaped over the stone fence and surrendered. One of the color guard, Private THEODORE MARTIN, while lying wounded within a few yards of the fence, called one of the Yankees to take him up and carry him off. The Yankee did not stop, but upon MARTIN threatening to shoot him, came back and bore him off, telling him that he must hurry up, as he (the Yankee) wanted to get out of that infernal fire."

The First Virginia, when it left Richmond, had six hundred men, and was afterward increased to eight hundred by the addition of two companies. After the battle of Williamsburgh and Seven Pines it had only eighty men, but was recruited to two hundred from conscripts. It has again been reduced, and now to about forty men.

The gentleman to whom we are indebted for the above information, who is a brave and cool officer, says that at no time have our men believed they were whipped. They were repulsed from the heights, but no effort was made by the Federals to pursue them. The falling back of Lee was orderly, and there was no straggling by men who were unhurt.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

Another account, which is derived from a young and gallant officer of the First Virginia Infantry, states that the fighting on Friday was opened by artillery along the whole line, between 1 and 2 o'clock, the firing continuing for two or three hours. During this artillery duel the division of Gen. PICKETT was drawn up in line in the immediate rear of our batteries. When the firing of cannon ceased, the order for the infantry to advance was given, which was done at common time—no double-quicking or cheering, but solemnly and steadily these veterans directed their steps towards the heavy and compact columns of the enemy. The skirmishers were at once engaged, the enemy having a double line of skirmishers to oppose our single line. The enemy were driven from their position behind a stone fence, over which Intrenchments had been thrown up, and our forces occupied their position about twenty minutes. About this time a flanking party of the enemy, marching in column by regiments, was thrown out from the enemy's left on our extreme right, which was held by KEMPER'S brigade, and by an enfilading fire forced the retirement of our troops. This flanking party was very soon dispersed by our artillery, with immense loss, and scattered in confusion and disorder. With their repulse the heavy fighting of the day terminated.

CASUALTIES.

Gen. KEMPER, whose gallantry has distinguished him on many a hard-fought field, was struck whilst leading his brigade in a charge, after our troops had successfully assaulted the enemy's first line of intrenchments. He was shot in the side and groin by a Minié ball, and fell forward from his horse. He was picked up and taken to a house on the battle-field, which was afterwards taken possession of by a squad of Yankees. A party of men belonging to different regiments of his brigade, rallied by a Sergeant of Company D, First Virginia regiment, charged these Yankees, drove them from the house and rescued their gallant commander, whom they bore to the rear on a blanket. He was taken to the division hospital, two miles in the rear of the battle-field. At 3 o'clock on Saturday, the 4th inst., he was still alive, but his physicians regarded his situation as exceedingly critical.

Gen. ARMISTEAD was shot while standing on the enemy's intrenchments with his hat hoisted on his sword, cheering his men on in the charge. He fell into the hands of the enemy, and subsequently died of his wounds.

Col. WILLIAMS, who commanded the First Virginia regiment, received the fatal shot very soon after the infantry fighting became general. He fell from his horse and expired almost instantly. The enemy obtained possession of his body.

Maj. LATTIMER, of the artillery, formerly Captain of COURTNEY'S battery, is reported to have lost an arm; Col. TAZEWELL PATTON, of the Seventh Virginia Infantry, was severely wounded, and is missing; Col. MAHO, of the Third Virginia Infantry, slightly wounded; Major OTEY, of the Eleventh Virginia, wounded in the shoulder by shell.

The First regiment went into the action with six companies, and eighteen commissioned officers, of whom seventeen were killed, wounded or missing.

STILL ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

At length we are beginning to receive something intelligible with reference to the great battles in Pennsylvania, perhaps the most bloody and stubbornly-contested of the whole war. From an officer of the Second Mississippi regiment, who participated in the three days' engagement, we have the following facts:

On Wednesday, the fighting was in the immediate vicinity and around the town of Gettysburgh, and resulted in the enemy being driven one mile and a half beyond that place. During the day our forces captured 4,000 prisoners, all of whom were paroled, rather than have the army encumbered with them while the battles were in progress. Their loss in killed and wounded was also very heavy. Our loss in this day's fighting was estimated at from 600 to 800 killed, wounded and missing. During this engagement, the corps of Gen. HILL and the division of Maj.-Gen. PENDER were principally engaged.

On the next day (Thursday) Gens. EWELL and LONGSTREET engaged the enemy on the right and left, the line of battle extending two miles and a half on each wing. The enemy were driven back, with a loss comparatively small on our side, until their army was concentrated on a commanding hill, two miles beyond the town. This hill was fortified by a stone fence, over and against which dirt had been thrown, constituting a formidable breastwork. After they had been driven back to this position the fighting for the day was discontinued.

On Friday skirmishing was commenced between 1 and 2 o'clock in the day—HILL'S corps and HETH'S division being principally engaged. They reached the intrenchments, as did also the division of Gen. PICKETT. After the enemy's works were carried, there was heavy fighting within the intrenchments; but the overpowering masses of the enemy compelled our forces to retire. The Yankee batteries were concentrated on a commanding hill, in the shape of a half moon, and our troops in charging them had to advance through an open field, nearly a mile in extent, which was raked by an encircling fire from the batteries posted as above described. Our loss here was heavy, and our forces, after the most desperate fighting, were forced to fall back beyond the range of the fire. In this fight our heavy reserves were not engaged.

As our informant came back to the rear he passed our trains of wagons and prisoners, which extended, he thinks, a distance of fifteen miles. They were moving in the direction of the river, and his impression is that our army was withdrawn from its position at Gettysburgh with a view to the security of these trains. Twelve of the wagons connected with these trains were captured by the enemy's cavalry, but all were subsequently recaptured by IMBODEN'S command, with the exception of three, which were burnt by the enemy. Our informant himself was made a prisoner, but in fifteen minutes after was recaptured by our men.

In the whole three days' fighting we lost but two pieces of cannon, and these were abandoned because of the destruction of their carriages. In the whole distance traveled by this officer, from the time he left the field of battle until he reached Winchester, he did not see a single straggler—a fact which fully controverts the Yankee stories of demoralization and disorganization.

The first uneasiness he saw manifested with reference to the situation of Gen. LEE'S army, was on his arrival in Richmond, and not until then did he hear the slightest apprehension expressed of our ability, not only to hold our position, but to advance on the enemy when deemed advisable so to do.

INCIDENTS.

Maj.-Gen. PICKETT is represented to have been deeply affected by the loss of so many of his gallant officers, and it is said that he wept bitterly over the mutilation of his noble division. The report that he was wounded, turns out to be incorrect.

Whilst our infantry was steadily advancing on the enemy's works over the open plain, many of the Yankee gunners deserted their pieces and rushed into our lines, and begged to be taken prisoners. They were greatly alarmed, and in some instances assisted in carrying our wounded from the field, with a view to get to the rear as prisoners.

REPORTS FROM WINCHESTER.

WINCHESTER, July 8, 1863.

Perfectly authentic news from the battle-field at Gettysburgh has come no later than up to Friday night. I will not attempt now a full description, it will be time enough when the fighting there is over. As you have doubtless learned ere this, our troops under Gen. A. P. HILL crossed the Potomac at Williamsport, and advanced towards Gettysburgh, took a position Wednesday about three miles from the town, and near a range of hills, which intervened between him and the town.

After desultory skirmishing, which continued most of the day until one o'clock P. M., he moved on the enemy in front. Gen. EWELL, who had been at Carlisle, came up from that direction, and reached a position on our extreme left. Soon after, Gen. HILL advanced to the attack. Here Gen. EWELL encountered a large body of the enemy, who had apparently come up from the rear of Gettysburgh, and who afterwards constituted the extreme right of the enemy. With two of his divisions—RODES' and EARLY'S—he engaged the enemy in his front simultaneously, with Gen. A. P. HILL in the centre. While this was progressing Gen. LONGSTREET swung around his column to the right, and on Thursday morning appeared on the enemy's extreme left. Such was the position of our lines in the first day's engagement. The result of the fighting that day was the complete repulse of the enemy from his position, followed by Gen. HILL'S and part of Gen. EWELL'S corps, who drove them across the range of hills between us and the town, and to a point about half a mile beyond, where they occupied a mountain, a splendid and almost impregnable position, which they fortified and bristled with artillery, their line holding this mountain and extending to the right and left of it.

Thursday the events of the day opened as on Wednesday, heavy skirmishing commencing at an early hour and continuing until about 1 o'clock P. M., when Gen. LONGSTREET, whose corps constituted our right wing, advanced to the attack, and succeeded in driving before him the enemy's left, after hard fighting for the remainder of the day and during a portion of the night.

On Friday, LONGSTREET again opened the fight on the right, which extended to the left, EWELL driving in the enemy's left before him. Thus our whole line surrounded three sides of the mountain, the enemy within; but such was the strength of their position that to take it by assault was almost a hopeless undertaking. Nevertheless, our infantry, preceded by heavy fire of artillery, charged it several times during the day, and, though almost uniformly successful in capturing batteries, were compelled, owing to the heavy fire of artillery concentrated on them, to fall back to the position whence they started. The charge had to be made across an open and gradually inclined plain, without any protection whatever from the observation of the enemy on the mountain. With over one hundred pieces of artillery we kept up an incessant fire on the enemy, frequently dislodging them from their strong positions and slaughtering great numbers. The musketry and cannonading is described as most terrific by all who participated, and exceeding in rapidity and severity any previous battle of the war. Notwithstanding, our gallant men boldly "faced the music," and could not be restrained. Not a man or a regiment flinched. The enemy, too, who raised the rallying cry, "You are fighting for your homes, Boys, fought unusually well. The loss on both sides is heavy, that of the enemy roughly estimated at from two or three to one of ours killed and wounded. At this date, though, it is impossible to obtain anything like a correct estimate. It may be observed, though, that four-fifths at least of our casualties are from wounds, and those principally in the hands and limbs. Very few severely wounded have yet reached here. Over 2,000 wounded have reached here since the first day's fight, and as many more are on the way. Among the wounded officers here are Maj.-Gens. PENDER, HAYS, Brig.-Gens. G. T. ANDERSON, of Georgia; SCALES, of North Carolina, and JENKINS. Gen. HOOD was severely wounded in the arm by the fragment of a shell, but fortunately the wound does not endanger the arm. He was struck while going into action on the right, Thursday. Gen. TRIMBLE lost the leg in which he was once wounded before. None of these officers, I am pleased to state, are seriously wounded. Gens. GARNETT, KEMPER, ARMISTEAD and BARKSDALE are unquestionably killed. The three first belonged to PICKETT'S division, which suffered most severely in General and field officers and men—particularly in the second.

I have said that we have no established information from the battle-field since the close of the day's operations on Friday. But one report has prevailed, however, of the preceding Saturday and Sunday, and all who have left the field since Saturday morning agree in the statement. Such is the uniformity in this that it is believed to be reliable. The report that Gen. Lee, desiring to draw the enemy from his strong position on the mountain, and avoid an unnecessary sacrifice of his men in taking it by storm, effected a retreat toward the Potomac, preceded by his wagon trains. The Yankees, believing it a genuine falling back to this side of the river, came down from the heights and followed, when, at a distance of two or three miles they encountered our picket line, which fell back toward the main body. HILL and LONGSTREET turned upon them, and repulsed them with great slaughter. Meantime their retreat to the mountain again was intercepted.

Gen. EWELL, who had also fallen back from his position on the l[illegible] concealed his men from the observation of the enemy, and when HILL and LONGSTREET commenced driving them back, moved so as to get in their rear—Jackson-like—and cut off their retreat to their fortifications on the mountain, capturing over 50 regiments and 30 pieces of artillery. Though no official confirmation has yet been received here of this report, it obtains very general credence.

The enemy attacked our wagon train and convoy near Williamsport, Monday evening, but were repulsed, with the loss of 100 prisoners, after two hours or more hard fighting by Gen. JENKINS. The enemy numbered a brigade and eight pieces of artillery. We had three pieces of the Washington artillery. These attacks on our wagon trains are of almost daily occurrence and unless they are strongly conveyed the passage from the river to the army is dangerous. STUART (Gen. JEB.) has penetrated almost within sight of Washington, and intercepted and captured about 180 wagons and 1,100 mules.

The destruction of our pontoon bridge below Williamsport was owing to carelessness. It was guarded by an inadequate body of men, and they without arms. LEE, however, seems to have little use for it at present.

Col. Thomas, Eighth Georgia; Col. Jack Brown, Fifty-ninth Georgia; Maj. Gee, Georgia; Col. Kennedy, South Carolina; Lieut.-Col. Whittle, Thirty-eighth Virginia; Col. Griffin, Eighteenth Mississippi; Col. W. S. Luce, Eighteenth Mississippi, missing; Col. W. T. Holder, Seventeenth Mississippi; Lieut.-Col. Fleiser, Seventeenth Mississippi; Lieut.-Col. McElroy, Thirteenth Mississippi; Maj. Bradley, Thirteenth Mississippi; Col. H. Gantt, Virginia; Col. Hinton, Virginia, (reported;) Col. Stuart, Fifty-sixth Virginia; Col. W. T. Patton, Virginia, in enemy's hands; Lieut.-Col. Feagan, Fifteenth Alabama, leg amputated; Maj. Berkeley, Virginia; Maj. Wilson, Twenty-eighth Virginia; Adjt. Goodloe, Eighteenth Mississippi, supposed mortally; Col. Lightfoot, Sixth Alabama; Maj. Culver, Sixth Alabama; Col. Humphries and Maj. Blair, Second Mississippi, missing; Lieut.-Col. Moseley, Forty-second Mississippi; Col. Stone, Second Mississippi; Col. Conlin, Fifty-fifth North Carolina.

Brig.-Gen. ARCHER, of Tennessee, who opened the fight, was captured on the first day. We captured Brig.-Gen. GRAHAM.

WINCHESTER, July 9.

Of the rumor I mentioned in my last, concerning the successful ruse of Gen. LEE at Gettysburgh, Sunday—the cutting off of a large number of prisoners, the capture of the fortified mountains, &c.—there is no positive confirmation or denial. The disadvantages of our position may be understood by saying it was decidedly worse than the respective positions of the hostile forces at the first battle of Fredericksburgh reversed. It is generally believed and conceded that we have gained a victory. Our loss, at first greatly exaggerated, has dwindled down most astonishingly. Late Yankee papers, it is said, acknowledge a defeat and heavy loss. At any rate the invasion has done much toward disposing the minds of the people of Pennsylvania for peace. According to latest intelligence there has been no fighting since Sunday. A seemingly well authenticated report prevails, to the effect that the enemy are falling back toward Washington, and that Gen. LEE'S forces, at various points, is moving in the same direction. Another great pitch-battle will be fought soon, and that on the soil of Maryland, of which I hope to be wholly or in part an eye-witness.

Detachments (several hundred strong) of our soldiers arrived here almost daily, and are forwarded, under command of some field officer, to the army. But for this moving in bodies many of our men would be cut off and captured by the Yankee cavalry. The Potomac, lately swollen several feet by the heavy rains, is again, and I am informed, in fordable condition. Several crossed by fording at Williamsport yesterday.

Most of our slightly wounded have arrived here, and are being forwarded with all dispatch, as far as possible, to the rear. Among our wounded general officers I have carefully omitted to mention Gen. PAUL J. SEMMES, of McLAW'S division, who was struck in the thigh, a little above the knee, the missile severing the femoral artery. I am pleased to state, however, that his condition is not considered critical. He is at a private house in Martinsburgh, and most attentively nursed. Among other field officers wounded, in addition to those already sent you, are Col. JOHN B. WEEMS, Tenth Georgia, in arm, (the third wound received at different times;) Major OSMAR DAWSON, Eighth Georgia; Col. LITTLE, —— Georgia; Col. WADWORTH, Twenty-eighth Georgia; Col. GIBSON, Forty eighth Georgia, mortally wounded and in the hands of the enemy; Major G. W. ROSS, Second Georgia battalion, wounded and in the enemy's hands. Complete lists will be sent you hereafter.

A large hotel on Main street—TAYLOR'S—is filled with MILROY'S wounded ragamuffins, captured in the late storming of the works commanding the city. Near ten thousand prisoners are on their way here from the late battle-field. It is understood that many, or all, of those taken the first day were released on account of some emergency which would not then allow the detailing of a guard to bring them off.

The crop of cereals throughout the Valley is in a most flourishing condition, and promises an abundant harvest. The uncut wheat was too far advanced to be injured materially by the long continued rains, yet I fear the growing corn, unusually promising, has been seriously hurt in some localities. The sturdy, patriotic old farmers of this lovely section—until we arrive within a short distance of Winchester—appear to be surrounded with every comfort and needful thing that a generous soil can afford. From Staunton to Winchester the scene presented to the traveler is scarcely less attractive and magnificent than as it first appeared to "essed [illegible] in living green," and in all its pristine beauty to the earliest settlers.

Not having yet reached the vicinity of the battle-field, I am unable to give you particulars of the bloody contest, but will close with some authentic details of the operations of Gen. IMBODEN, the "Guerilla Chief," prior to the invasion, and which have not yet appeared in print. On the 9th of June he left Churchville, and with his command marched one hundred and fifty-nine miles. At his approach to Romney the Yankees were seized with a panic, and fell back from every point they occupied in that region to New Creek, where they had over 3,500 men. Pushing matters, and losing no time, he destroyed utterly and beyond repair two splendid iron bridges over the North and South branches of the Potomac. They were of FINK'S patent, and, except the bridge at Fairmont, the best and finest by far of any on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. One was 400 feet in length, the other 538—were shot down with artillery, and fell thirty odd feet below, presenting a wreck as never was seen.

He then burnt the railroad bridges over Little Caper, over Potomac Creek, Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and over Evert's Creek, near Cumberland, made two crevases in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal that can't be filled in two months; burnt all the depots, water-tanks and stationary engines between Caper and Cumberland, captured 30 or 40 prisoners, 60 or 70 horses, and sent out over 500 fat cattle.

On the 17th, Col. GEORGE, of IMBODEN'S command, drove a Yankee battalion out of Cumberland by shelling them in the streets, and the Mayor surrendered the city to our boys. KELLY, commander of the Yankee cavalry, was there, but made his escape on an engine which was stopped about eight miles from by a breake in the road made by our men. Citizens state that here he jumped off and took to the bushes on foot.

On the night of the 17th Gen. IMBODEN camped in Alleghany County, Md., twelve miles from Cumberland, but recrossed into Virginia the next morning. This movement was prompted by a rumor that KELLY was coming to attack IMBODEN at daybreak on the 19th. As there were no railroads, mails, or telegraphs in those parts of the General's visit, it is inferred that his command were ignorant of what was progressing in the civilized world.

A LETTER FROM GEN. LEE.

From the Richmond Enquirer, July 13.

The President received a letter from Gen. LEE, on Saturday, which puts to rest all anxieties in relation to the situation of our army in Maryland, and confirms the statements which have been made, that our army has been uniformly victorious in its encounters with the enemy in Pennsylvania. The letter states, in effect, that the engagements at Gettysburgh resulted in defeating the enemy completely, in killing and wounding a number far exceeding our own, and in the capture of a large number of prisoners; that the falling back of our army to Hagerstown was a prudential move, not occasioned by any success on the part of the enemy, and not through any apprehension of contingencies arising which might insure his success at that point.

The gist of the letter, in a few words, is that the enemy was even more thoroughly cut up and whipped than he ever has been upon Southern soil; and that the occupation of Hagerstown was a movement dictated by strategy and prudence, as essential to the success of the campaign. The secret involved in this movement may as well be left to Gen. LEE to develop in his own good time. The prisoners in our hands and on the way here, we understand, estimated at between 15,000 and 18,000. The army is in fine spirits and excellent condition.

A GENERAL REVIEW.

From the Richmond Dispatch, July 13.

We have no official account of the battle of Gettysburgh, although we should think the authorities must surely have received one before this. But many wounded officers—some of them men of great intelligence—have arrived, and from a comparison of their statements we are enabled to make out the following facts:

The battle of Gettysburgh was, on our part, a triumphant success—an overwhelming victory. We beat the enemy on all three of the days. On Friday we drove him five miles, assaulted his fortifications and carried them. He was utterly beaten and discomfited at all points. That Gen. Lee did not continue to hold those fortifications was solely due to the fact that they were in that mountainous country overlooked by a lofty range of heights which entirely commanded them. To these heights the Yankees fled for protection, precisely as they did to their gunboats at Malvern Hill, and Gen. LEE withdrew his army for the same reason that he withdrew from the range of the gunboats' fire. That he was repulsed in his attack on the intrenchments that he fled in disorder—that his army was demoralized—are Yankee lies of the first magnitude. They were not believed at Washington, however they might have been here, for that city was in a state of uncontrollable terror on Sunday night. That LINCOLN did not believe them, is evident from his calling off all the troops from the neighborhood of Old Point, save a mere handful. The slaughter of the Yankees was terrible beyond all former example, and the telegraph operator was not so far wrong when he said we had 40,000 prisoners, as had been supposed. We brought away 13,000, and thousands were allowed to escape. Every house in Gettysburgh was filled with Yankee soldiers, who had been left behind when our troops entered. The soldiers finding out that they were within, (generally in concealment,) rushed in and dragged them out of their hiding-places. The enormous incumbrance inflicted by these prisoners was one cause of Gen. Lee's retrograde march. Every officer who has spoken on the subject says that this movement was not determined by anything the Yankees had done or could do. Gen. LEE had won the ground and could have held it, but he chose, for military reasons, to fall back, after having utterly broken the backbone of the Yankee army. Apparently he has no intention to recross the Potomac, and Washington is nearer to Hagerstown than to Gettysburgh.

It is stated upon good authority that our loss in killed, wounded and missing did not exceed 10,000. If, as the Yankees assert, we lost 4,000 prisoners, then our loss in killed and wounded was only 6,000—a very small loss considering the number of combatants and the length of the battle. The Yankees took no cannon, although they claim to have taken five. Two pieces were abandoned because they were disabled, and the horses attached to them were killed. These fell into their hands, and form the sole dismal trophies of what they pretend to consider a great triumph. Our army is in splendid order, and ready for another conflict. They have not been pursued, as the Yankees falsely stated, for they were in no condition to pursue, and it was, in fact, the very thing that Gen. LEE most of all desired. MEADE seems to have gone to parts unknown.

THE FALL OF VICKSBURGH.

GEN. JOHNSTON'S DISPATCH.

JACKSON, Tuesday, July 7.

Hon. J. A. Seddon, Secretary of War:

Vicksburgh capitulated on the 4th inst.

The garrison was paroled, and are to be returned to our lines—the officers retaining their side arms and personal baggage.

This intelligence was brought by an officer who left the place on Sunday, the 5th.

J. E. JOHNSTON, General.

From the Richmond Sentinel, July 10.

JACKSON, July 7.—Vicksburgh has fallen. It was surrendered on the morning of the 4th, the men being in a starving condition, and completely worn out with excessive fatigue. The terms of capitulation were that the officers should be allowed their side-arms, horses and all their private property. They and their men were paroled, and immediately allowed to march out with all their colors.

Immediately after the surrender Gen. GRANT sent a boat load of supplies to the famished garrison. Some of the officers have arrived here.

Officers who have come out say that had Gen. JOHNSTON reached there twelve days sooner he could not have relieved the garrison, as they could not muster over seven thousand men for duty. Many of the citizens were leaving with their families, negroes, stock, &c.

HOW THE NEWS WAS RECEIVED.

From the Richmond Sentinel, July 9.

We need not say how sorely we regret this disaster. It comes, too, unexpectedly, for we had just received such assurances of the strength of Vicksburgh as to have given us considerable confidence in its safety. We certainly did not anticipate so early a reduction.

It is now manifest that the assurances we have referred to, like too much of the news that comes from that quarter, were without foundation. Indeed, instead of the ample stores of food in Vicksburgh of which we were told, we are informed through private sources, that flour sold in the beleaguered city at four hundred dollars per barrel, and corn at three dollars per ear. The probability is that Gen. PEMBERTON fought until there was no food left for his army and the citizens, and despairing of relief from Gen. JOHNSTON, he could do nothing but capitulate. The favorable terms granted him, show how anxious GRANT was to terminate the siege without another fight.

The people are asking, and the world will ask, where was Gen. JOHNSTON, and what part did he perform in this grand tragedy. In answer it will be said that, with an army larger than won the first battle of Manassas, he made not a motion, he struck not a blow, for the relief of Vicksburgh. For nearly seven weeks he sat down in sound of the conflict, and he fired not a gun. He heard the confident declarations with which the besieged animated their courage—"Never mind!—Johnston is coming!"—but JOHNSTON never came. He did not so much as harass the enemy, but left GRANT to pursue his work without interruption. If MOSBY and his little band had been there, instead of JOHNSTON and his army, GRANT would not have enjoyed such impunity. JOHNSTON has been supposed to have some profound plan, some brilliant strategy, which at the proper time he would spring, and which would atone for any seeming inactivity. But he has done no more than to sit by and see Vicksburgh fall, and send us the news.

The news which comes from LORING'S command, and from the alleged operations at Port Hudson, we receive with much allowance. Gen. Richard Taylor is put in too many widely separated places. He is affirmed to be at Milliken's Bend, and at Port Hudson, and near New-Orleans, and at Brashear City almost on the same day. All that we know with certainty is that he captured Brashear City, and that he probably has advanced to the Mississippi. Gen. MAGRUDER, who has been affirmed to be with him, is without doubt in Texas.

The anxiety to hear from Gen. LEE is great; but at the time of writing this we have nothing additional. We may hear something before going to press, as the wires to Martinsburgh are working again. If we do it will be given.

P. S.—A dispatch is received from Martinsburgh, which is not so favorable as we had hoped it would be. But let every true man maintain his courage and enthusiasm and never droop a feather. Our cause is bound to prevail—all that is needed is manliness and fortitude.

The Richmond Whig of the 9th has several articles on the fall of Vicksburgh, from which we make extracts:

"What is most to be feared as the immediate result of the fall of Vicksburgh is the conversion of the great army under Grant from a stationary into a moving force. From its organization, almost, it has been confined to the work of taking that city. It is now free to operate elsewhere. This is the evil against which the Government is now called to make the most energetic preparation. It is not difficult to imagine in what direction GRANT will move, nor to estimate the effect of so powerful an army coming upon the field, with no corresponding accession on our side. This is the danger that presents the most serious grounds for alarm. It would be blindness not to see it, and imbecility not to put forth the most strenuous exertions to guard against it. We can only pray that those to whom the management of affairs is intrusted may be equal to the crisis."

THE FIGHTING BEHIND VICKSBURGH.

JACKSON, Wednesday, July 8.

Col. MONTGOMERY, aid to Gen. PEMBERTON, with two hundred mounted men, arrived here to-day. Gen. GRANT sent ten thousand men back, and about the same number to attack Gen. PRICE. GRANT'S force was near 100,000. He commands in person the forces which are marching on Jackson.

Everything here is in the wildest state of excitement. Citizens are flying in every direction, and the streets are filled with stock, negroes, &c. Families are leaving in ox carts and every other species of conveyance. There was a terrible storm here last night, with very heavy rains. Citizens living beyond Clinton report that the enemy are burning every dwelling they pass. A fight is hourly expected here.

From the Dispatch, July 11.

JACKSON, Thursday, July 9—9 A. M.

A regular artillery duel has been going on for the past hour, three miles off. The Yankees are moving up slowly and steadily. Warm work is looked for at daylight.

THURSDAY, July 9—4 P. M.

The enemy are still advancing slowly, shelling our cavalry. They are now within four miles of our works. There will probably be no engagement before morning.

FRIDAY, July 10, 8:30 A. M.

The attack has begun. Our batteries opened on them finely. The enemy is evidently in heavy force.

Heavy infantry and artillery skirmishing is going on. The enemy is shelling the city, and has killed several soldiers and citizens. No general engagement has taken place yet. Our troops are in excellent spirits—every man at his post.

LATER.

The heavy skirmishing continues on the Clinton road. The enemy is slowly working around our left. The attack may yet become general before morning, though their troops are still pressing forward. But few men have been lost on our side yet. The enemy must be suffering for water, as all the cisterns and ponds have been destroyed. The thermometer indicates 92 degrees.

SATURDAY, July 11—11 P. M.

The enemy are still concentrating on our right to reach Pearl River. Our forces have just driven them back in the centre, and burned the houses occupied by their sharpshooters.

SUNDAY, July 12.

The enemy opened at 6 o'clock this morning from his batteries on our left, and at 8 A. M. rained shell upon the city. The enemy made a charge and were repulsed, and are now moving around our right. Scouts report that BURNSIDE is crossing at Birdsong's Ferry with two divisions.

ON THE JAMES RIVER.

From the Richmond Dispatch, July 13.

Yesterday morning the report was received that the day before an iron-clad, two gunboats and five transports had appeared at Lower Brandon and landed 5,000 troops. Later in the day advices were received at the War Department that two Monitors, eight gunboats and a transport had appeared at the point named, but had landed no troops. It is not likely that the Yankees would land any force on the south side of James River for any other purpose than that of devastating the crops and running off negroes. They would hardly attempt an "on to Petersburgh" with the feeble force they have in Eastern Virginia. The movement, if it can be dignified by that name, evidently has theft for its object.

GEN. NEAL DOW.

From the Richmond Dispatch, July 13.

Gen. NEAL DOW, who was wounded at Port Hudson, was captured by our scouts at a private house near Clinton, La., on the 2d inst. He was started "on to Richmond," and arrived here Saturday and committed to Libby Prison. The following is an item in the gentleman's career worth mentioning at this time:

"When Gen. BRAGG evacuated Pensacola he burnt the mills and lumber belonging to THOMAS M tered over the ground. They were Whitworth guns of small calibre, breech loaders, of course, and of the Manchester pattern—(our dear neutral English cousins)—24-pound and 12-pound bronze field-pieces and Parrott guns, (imitations made at Richmond)—all and every kind which it is possible to name in ordnance nomenclature. And this system and provision for the defence of the well-called stronghold extended in a semi-circle, whose arc would describe a distance of four to five miles.

I have never visited the battle-fields of the Old World, but I do not believe that the siege of Sebastopol, or any kindred struggle, affords instances of such persistent and heroic courage and endurance—of such strategic and engineering skill, as were displayed upon this remarkable field. It would repay a journey of a thousand miles to visit the field of these operations. But I must close to save the mail.

THE WAR IN THE FAR WEST.

Stirring News Expected from Gen. Blunt—On the March for Fort Gibson—Col. Phillips Hard Pressed—Gen. Blunt's Plans—The Guerrillas Active—Leaders Killed, &c., &c.

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, Thursday, July 9, 1863.

We are likely to have some stirring news from the District of the Frontier ere long. Maj.-Gen. BLUNT left his headquarters at Fort Scott on Sunday night last, the 5th of July. He took with him four companies of the Sixth Kansas cavalry, under Col. JUDSON; three companies of the Third Wisconsin cavalry, under Major CALKINS, and Company A, Fourteenth regiment Kansas Volunteer cavalry, raised as body guard for the General. Capt. SMITH and two sections of the Second Kansas battery were also in the command. The Sixth Kansas had with it two 12-pound mountain howitzers. No tents or baggage was taken, and but six days' rations. It is the General's intention to reach Fort Gibson, 170 miles south of Fort Scott, in four or five days. The immediate cause of this movement, which was only determined upon twenty-four hours before being put in execution, was the reception of dispatches showing the critical condition of Col. PHILLIPS and the National forces at Fort Gibson. The constant raids of the mounted rebels had deprived PHILLIPS of a large portion of his stock, and as a consequence he has found his operations circumscribed by the necessities of his position. Unable to send out the usual heavy reconnottering and scouting parties, the Indians, composing a large portion of his force, have become demoralized and discouraged, and refused utterly to leave the shelter of the works. All the white troops under Col. PHILLIPS, at the beginning of this month, consisted of four companies of the Sixth Kansas cavalry, more than half of which is dismounted, and Hopkins' Third Kansas battery. Since then he has, in all probability, been reinforced by six companies of the Colorado Second, under Lieut.-Col. DODD; also, the First Kansas colored regiment, Col. J. M. WILLIAMS, so long encamped at Baxter's Spring, and best drilled infantry regiment in the West.

Gen. BLUNT, when his forces are united—which will reach about 4,500 effective men, and 16 guns, about 2,000 of whom are whites—will move them across the Arkansas River, offering the enemy battle. The rebels number 7,000 men, under Gens. CABELL, STEELE and EWING, and Cols. COOPER, STANDWAITIE and MCINTOSH. HINDMAN is reported at Fort Smith in chief command.

Gen. BLUNT will move rapidly upon Fort Smith, and expects to take and hold that place. From thence, with what mounted force he has and can obtain, he will make raid westward and south to Boggy Depot, the Red River Valley and the Choctaw country. The special object sought is to destroy a large quantity of supplies said to be stored at Boggy Depot and some point nearer Texas. In this raid he will also gather up all the able-bodied contrabands he can, in order to fill up the colored brigade he is now recruiting.

He has determined to clear out of his district the rebel forces. With the exception of small bands of guerrillas, that portion of the district north of the Arkansas is clear of the enemy. South of the river He the force already spoken of. Our Kansas General has for some time past been meditating a dashing raid of the character I have mentioned. Sometime since he assisted a party of loyal Texans to return to their homes in the counties immediately south of the Indian Territory. According to their statements it would appear that the northern tier of counties in Texas were and are still loyal. The reign of terror existing in that State has repressed the sentiment, but it still awaits a favorable opportunity to express itself. The Union Texans will be heard from at the time BLUNT shall be heard from in the Red River vicinity.

The border guerrillas still continue quite active. During the last two weeks they have, however, lost several of their leaders, among others the notorious Col. PARKER, who will be remembered as the author of a letter to Gen. BLUNT, threatening vengeance upon him for summary punishment of bushwhackers. He was shot at a little town named Wellington, in Jackson County, by four of the First cavalry, Missouri State Militia. He was in full Confederate uniform at the time, and was accompanied by three other rebels, supposed to be his Adjutant and Staff. PARKER fired first upon our men, who, returning it, killed him at the second shot.

GEORGE TODD, another, and, if possible, more infamous scoundrel than PARKER, was killed a few days since in Jackson County. TODD was the leader of the terrible massacre of contrabands on the Sam Gaty some three or four months since. He has met a deserved fate. Several others, less known, have also been killed within the past week in Jackson and Lafayette Counties.

The guerrillas have lately made incursions into the southern part of the State. On the night of the 5th they entered Linn County, on the Mine Creek settlement, where they stole everything they found and burnt several houses. A few days previous they entered the State near Fort Scott, surrounded the farmhouse of a well-known Union man, and took therefrom a famous Federal scout, THOMAS WHITESIDES, a member of the Sixth Kansas, detailed to such duty. The Union pickets were stationed within a quarter of a mile, but the guerrilla movements were taken with such precautions as to be entirely successful. WHITESIDES was finally carried into Missouri and after traveling eight miles was murdered, and his body left by the roadside where it was found. The leader of the murderers, a fellow named TAYLOR, was some time since captured by our troops. At that time WHITESIDES saved his life, the soldiers being about to shoot him. TAYLOR was brought a prisoner to Fort Scott, and finally released on parole. This is the reward of our forbearance.

The enrollment is being rapidly completed in this State. It is expected that our quota will be small, though it is hoped enough to fill the regiments now in the field. Capt. SYDNEY CLARKE, Acting Assistant Provost-Marshal-General for this State, Nebraska and Colorado, has been indefatigable in his exertions to push forward the work, and perfected all necessary arrangements for the carrying out fully the provisions of the law.

The two new regiments being raised by Gen. BLUNT are filling quite rapidly. The Fourteenth Kansas Volunteers, cavalry, has five full companies recruited, and three others under way.

The Second regiment Colored Volunteers has five companies well under way, and will be filled by the raid of Gen. BLUNT, as will also a third regiment.

The weather is intensely warm. The crops are amazingly prolific. From every quarter of the State we hear of the immense wheat harvest. The people are jubilant over the general prosperity. Our towns are growing rapidly. Improvements are increasing in all directions. This city, Leavenworth, is making most rapid strides to metropolitan greatness. Its enterprise is astonishing, and its growth almost as rapid as the renowned Alladin palace. Some eight hundred buildings are reported in process of erection within the city limits, one-fourth of which are brick. Have not Kansians a right to be egotistical? Prosperity unparalleled, hearty sympathy with all the sublime issues of the age, a record of devotion to great principles, and a loyal name and fame, untarnished by rebellious acts or Copperhead sympathies.

AFFAIRS AT PORTSMOUTH AND NORFOLK.

Gen. Viele Relieved—The Murder of Lieut. Sanborn—An Opening for Lawyers—A Deserving Union Man.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

ON BOARD SHIP IDA, OFF PLYMOUTH AND NORFOLK, ELIZABETH RIVER, Va., Wednesday, July 15, 1863.

The office of Military Governor here having been abolished, Gen. EGBERT L. VIELE has been relieved from duty as such Governor, and it is said has been ordered to Annapolis, Md., to take charge of a camp of instruction for colored troops. The old channels of civil business are to be resumed. The unheard of anomaly of a great dearth of lawyers is realized in Norfolk and Portsmouth. The Virginian even calls for aid in this direction. The only lawyers left in the two cities qualified to practice in the Courts, is Lieut.-Gov. elect COOPER. The County District Court cannot be organized for want of a Judge, and numerous other embarrassments are alleged to exist, which the appearance here of several Northern practitioners would greatly tend to mitigate. I have no doubt that they would be immediately enabled to build up a remunerative business. The two cities, Norfolk and Portsmouth, are now under the control of the civil authorities, and everything looks most conspicuously for the future growth and prosperity of the two cities. Troops continue to come and go, but I am not permitted to indicate the designs of the Government in these movements.

The really brutal and entirely indefensible murder of Lieut. A. L. SANBORN, of the First United States Colored Volunteers, in the streets of Norfolk on Saturday last while leading his company through the principal thoroughfare of the city, is now the theme of public talk and anxiety. The facts elicited show the commission of a most atrocious murder. Lieut. SANBORN, who had been for some time previous to his murder engaged in recruiting colored soldiers for his company and regiment, was, when stricken down, in the act of leading his command back from the Custom-house where they had passed in review before Gen. VIELE. Upon reaching Union-street, where the quarters were situated and as the deceased was passing an alleged notorious Secesh den known as ANDREW FOSTER'S dry goods store, he was accosted by a rebel Doctor, D. M. WRIGHT, who with a number of his ilk were occupying the door-way, in an outrageously insulting remark. On hearing which the Lieutenant halted his company and stepping on the sidewalk replied to the murderer that if he was ever again addressed in that way he would have him (the Doctor) arrested. Turning away he ordered his company to right dress, and while performing this duty, with drawn sword, WRIGHT drew a revolver from a side pocket in his coat, and immediately fired from behind upon the lamented Lieutenant, without giving the least warning of his intentions. The ball entered just in the rear of the left shoulder and penetrated the spine. Lieut. SANBORN, on turning around, was greeted with another shot which passed through his uplifted hand and through the fleshy part of his left arm, near the shoulder. Notwithstanding the Lieutenant was mortally wounded, he managed to turn around and endeavored to wrench the pistol from the hand of his murderer. WRIGHT would have been instantly dispatched had it not been for the interference of Lieut.-Col. FLOOD, of the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth New-York, who secured the arrest of the coward. He was at once taken before the Provost-Marshal, where his conduct was arrogant and overbearing in the extreme, making extremely light of his terrible position. The doomed man was attended by his lawyer, and his wife and daughter, one of whom remarked in Court, "Don't mind it, father, the nasty Yankees won't dare to do anything with you." The examination concluded, the prisoner was remanded to the jail and placed in the murderers' cell, heavily ironed, whence, it is said, he will be taken and hung by the military authorities on Friday next. It is believed the scoundrel will be accorded a trial by a Military Commission. This is incontrovertibly one of the most daring and unblushing outrages that has hitherto marked the present struggle. A United States officer, in the discharge of his duties, is stricken down in broad daylight by the hand of an assassin—a traitor to his country—and yet he has the unparalleled audacity to ask to be paroled and treated as a prisoner of war.

Lieut. SANBORN was a native of Vermont, a graduate of Dartmouth College, and was about thirty years of age. Previous to the outbreak of the war he had been a teacher in the South. He afterwards held a position in the Quartermaster-General's Department at Washington, from which he was promoted to a Lieutenancy a few weeks since, and detailed to a command under Col. BIRNEY, Commissioner of colored troops for Virginia.

The body was deposited in the Portsmouth Cemetery vault yesterday afternoon to await the disposition of the friends of the deceased.

WRIGHT, the murderer, is a comparatively elderly man, and until very recently was practicing his profession in JEFF DAVIS' dominions, in addition to holding office under the rebel Government. He is a violent, hasty tempered man, and was doubtless, at the moment he committed the crime, for which his body will inevitably swing in mid air, considerably excited by liquor, of which he had been partaking freely during Saturday, the day the deed was committed.

A letter was found in the pocket of the deceased, received from his brother, T. D. SANBORN, who resides in East Cambridge, Massachusetts.

I learn that the murder was the result of more deliberation than was at first supposed. It is believed to have been planned in FOSTER'S store several days at least previous to it commission, and that two ladies who had been intrusted with the secrect had visited the store for the purpose of witnessing the murder. It is certain that two ladies fainted in FOSTER'S store as the deed was being committed. The body has been embalmed, and will go North.

The annual Commencement of Mrs. GREGORY'S Female Seminary, at Portsmouth, took place on the 9th inst., in the presence of a large audience. This was the tenth annual Commencement of this institution, and I notice it to show that education yet has some vitality in the South, particularly where it is fostered by a healthy Union sentiment.

Maj. JOHN F. SMITH, of the One Hundred and Tweifth New-York Volunteers, has been appointed Provost-Marshal of Portsmouth. He formerly held a similar position at Suffolk, where he gave the greatest satisfaction.

This dispatch is written on board the ship Ida, Capt. JOHN N. HALL, commanding. The Ida, at the breaking out of the rebellion, was stationed at West Point, up the York River, where her Captain was an involuntary rebel, and where he had a large amount of property, consisting of houses, lots, cattle, and an oyster bed, worth $30,000. Capt. HALL has, from the first, been an unconditional Union man, and has demonstrated his loyalty by abandoning his property and the rebels at one and the same time, and with his vessel, the Ida, seeking the protection of the Union gunboats, has rendered our cause valuable service ever since. Capt. HALL'S case is one truly worthy of the attention of the Government.

Nativity of Western Troops.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your Chicago correspondent was never more mistaken in his life than when he says that the volunteers of Iowa are principally New-York and New-England men. Nothing can be further from the truth. I am a native of this City, and not likely to be prejudiced against people of my own section.

For a long time I was a member of an Iowa regiment, and occupied a position which brought me constantly in contact with the first 20,000 men that entered the service from Iowa. I had a curiosity to learn the birthplaces of my comrades, all of whom are or have been in GRANT'S grand army, and think I succeeded in ascertaining what portion of the Union is entitled to the credit which the Iowa volunteers have gained in such abundance in this war. Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania are in the order named, the rightful owners of the glory reaped by the Iowa regiments, for of their sons are those regiments principally composed.

I state this not merely from my own personal observation, but statistics will bear me out. The census of 1860 showed that the population of Iowa was then upward of 680,000 souls. Of these, there were only 25,000 men, women and children of New-England birth. There were something more than 40,000 New-Yorkers; but Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, severally, were far more numerously represented than the Empire State. Add together the New-Yorkers and New-Englanders in Iowa, and they scarcely constitute one-tenth of the population of that splendid State. This being so, it is absurd to talk of New-Yorkers and New-Englanders forming the bulk of the volunteer army of Iowa.

I have many a time picked out Iowa and Ohio regiments from the rest of GRANT'S army on the march, though, so strong is the resemblance between the troops from those States, I never could tell to which of them a regiment so singled out belonged.

AN IOWA SOLDIER.

THE RIOT IN BOSTON.

From the Boston Courier, July 18.

A riot took place in this city last night which, but for the promptness of the measures taken to suppress it, would have probably proved as disastrous as that in New-York. The outbreak was apparently sudden, and with the fatal consequences it is not unreasonable to believe that a repetition of it will not be made.

WESLEY HILL and DAVID HOWE were engaged in distributing notifications to drafted men about noon. A notice had been left at a shop in Prince-street for a man who was not present, and Mr. HOWE stopping to talk with a woman in relation to the matter, was struck by her. An attempt was made to arrest the woman, when a gathering crowd hearing who the officers were, made an assault upon HOWE, beating him severely. He was rescued from the mob by Officer WILKINS, and carried into a store corner of Prince and Causeway streets. When it was supposed the crowd had dispersed, they proceeded toward the Merrimac House, where HOWE boarded, when they were again assailed, and HOWE was separated from the officer and further beaten. Dr. HALL was called to dress the wounds of HOWE, and found five or six cuts about his head, his eyes swelled and face severely bruised. Meantime Mr. HILL, escaping from the mob, reported the difficulty at the office of the Provost-Marshal.

A force of Police officers was sent to the scene of the disturbance, and in the attempt to quell it, Officer OSBRANDER was severely injured in the head. CURTIS TRASK, of the Second Station, was cut with a knife immediately under one of his eyes, cut through his clothes on his right side, and was severely bruised in his back. For a time there were fears that other riotous acts would be committed, but nothing further occurred beyond the gathering of crowds of people in and near the First Station-house. These crowds increased as a knowledge of the disturbances was made known, and during the afternoon many were looking on through curiosity, while others talked over the matter of the draft with considerable feeling.

These serious indications of difficulty caused measures to be taken to increase the police force in suitable locations, and orders were issued to notify the Lancers, the Eleventh battery, Capt. JONES, and the Forty-fourth regiment, to be ready for immediate service. An order was also sent to Fort Warren for troops, and three companies were sent up, which, after being marched through several of the principal streets, were quartered at the barracks in Beach-street. A company of regulars was also sent up from Fort Independence, and nearly a company of the Second cavalry, from Readville. These precautions, it was believed, would be sufficient to prevent any difficulty during the night.

As night approached, many young men, in squads of from six to twelve or more, from various parts of the city, were seen moving toward the North End, some of them with sticks or clubs, but even then it was not clear that any mischief was designed. At about half-past 8 o'clock, a crowd of from 500 to 1,000 gathered in front of the armory of the Eleventh battery, in Cooper-street, with riotous demonstrations. Capt. JONES, with a reputation for the dangers of a riot, but this did not avail, and an assault was made upon the building. Stones and bricks were freely thrown, the windows were broken, and the door forced, when some of the rioters entered the building, and several of the members of the battery were injured. It was then manifest that some more effectual measures must be taken, or the guns in possession of the battery would be captured. A gun had been loaded with canister shot, and when the mob were about to triumph, it was fired with fatal effect, killing several and wounding many more.

This shot caused the mob to waver, but they did not give way entirely until a bayonet charge was made upon them. The statements during the evening were very conflicting as to the result of the firing, but as near as could be ascertained at a late hour, the killed and wounded were as follows: A man about 35 years of age, name not known, was killed, eleven shot taking effect in his head and body, and his right arm was nearly shot off. The body was taken to the First Station-house. WM. CURRIER, a man of 71 years, father of Officer WM. W. CURRIER, who lived near the Armory, was killed, it is supposed, by the mob. He belonged in Bow, New-Hampshire, and had been living in this city about six months. JOHN NORTON, a boy 10 or 12 years of age, living at No. 166 Endicott-street, shot through the heart, and died instantly. MICHAEL GAFFY, 14 years old, living at No. 31 Cross-street, was shot in the bowels, and probably did not survive the night; his hand was also shot off. P. REYNOLDS, a boy of 12 years, living in Bolton-place, was shot in the hip, the bone being badly shattered, and his arm broken. He was sent to the hospital, and may survive.

The boys were all taken to the office of Dr. WALES, in North-square, and such measures were taken for the relief of the living as was found to be necessary. There were reports that the body of a woman was seen carried through the streets on a bier, but it could not be learned who she was. Reports of other persons being killed and wounded it was difficult to verify.

About the same time with the attack on the Armory, a mob of several hundred persons made a rush into Dock-square to procure arms. The store of THOMAS P. BARNES, No. 28, was broken open, the door and window being demolished, when the best arms in the store were immediately seized upon and carried away. Not less than one hundred guns, nearly as many pistols, and three or four dozen bowie knives, valued at some $3,000, were stolen. From appearances in the choice of the articles, and the position from which some of them were taken, it is believed that the leaders must have had knowledge of their location. The door of the entry adjoining was broken open, and the mob rushed up stairs to the shop of JOHN P. LOVELL, gunsmith, but it did not appear that the shop was entered.

The next rush was made for the store of WILLIAM READ & SON, Faneuil Hall-square. A guard of several officers has been stationed in this store, known to have a larger and more choice stock of firearms than any other in the City. When the mob entered Dock-square, JOHN M. DUNN, detective officer, who was at Mr. READ'S store, hurried to the Second Station-house, filled a carriage with officers well armed, and driving rapidly reached the store just as the mob was breaking in. One man who struck a blow upon the window was shot in the head, and the mob received a check. This man was JAMES CAMPBELL, very stout and muscular, and although the shot took effect above his eye, causing much blood to flow, it did not appear that he was seriously injured. He was carried to the station-house and locked up. Some efforts were made to effect his release on bail, which, however, proved ineffectual.

As soon as the riotous demonstations became known, an alarm was given to turn out the military, as well as the police force. It was but a short time before nearly the entire day police force in the City proper reported for duty at the Second Station, with a delegation of some thirty from South Boston. This force was sent to Dock square as fast as assembled, but the mob had separated, departing in different directions. The Mayor, Chief of Police, and Deputy Chief were early at the scene of the riot, promptly and efficiently directing the movements of the police and giving directions for the posting of the military.

The Light Dragoons were early on duty, and were placed as a patrol force in the neighborhood of the Cooper-street armory, in Haymarket Square, at Faneuil Hall, and other points where there were any gatherings or probability of a riot. The force from the forts was placed in and around Faneuil Hall, to be used as required, with two field pieces loaded in the Square. The cavalry from Readville was posted as a support to these guns. The Lancers were at their Armory in Sudbury-street, ready at any moment on call.

When the rumor of the acts of the mob became known, the streets in the vicinity of Dock-square, Faneuil Hall and Haymarket-square were soon thronged with people, to see or hear what was going on. The police force immediately cleared the squares, and the people were directed to go to their homes. At a late hour the police occupied Dock-square, allowing no one to pass except to go to their homes, when the entrance to Faneuil Hall-square was rigidly held under military rule.

The alarm of fire soon after 1 o'clock this morning was caused by an attempt to set fire to the armory in Cooper-street, during the absence of the guard. The fire was extinguished with but little injury.

The Journal of the 15th says:

Gov. ANDREW has issued an order thanking Brig.-Gen. PIERCE and the military under his command for their activity and efficiency last night; commanding the companies belonging in Charlestown, Roxbury, Cambridge, Somerville and Medford to report for duty this evening, and requesting all law and order-loving citizens to enlist for temporary duty in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth regiments. Every effort has been made and is in progress, for the preservation of the public peace, and those who may be criminally disposed to invade it may rely on a stern and effectual opposition.

By the statute of this Commonwealth, it is provided that any person acting in concert with a mob of thirty or more armed persons, who, in a riotous manner, shall take the life of a citizen, shall be deemed guilty of willful murder, and shall suffer the penalty prescribed for that crime.

Under this statute, four of the arrested rioters, named JAMES CAMPBELL, MICHAEL A. MCMAMARA, JOHN MCGRATH and ROBERT MCCARREN, were complained of in the Police Court to-day, and warrants were issued against them accordingly.

CAMPBELL was before the Police Court to-day, on a separate complaint for attempting to break and enter the store of WM. READ & SON, Faneuil Hall-square, and was held for examination to-morrow.

Since the foregoing was in type, JAMES CAMPBELL has been arraigned for the willful murder of Mr. WILLIAM CURRIER last evening in Cooper-street, and was fully committed to jail to await examination to-morrow. The same disposition will probably be made of MCNAMARA, MCGRATH and MCCARRON.

About 1 o'clock this afternoon some roughs in Endicott-street attempted to take the guns from one or two of the men who are doing guard duty in Cooper-street. The guard was reinforced and the roughs were quickly dispersed.

DISTURBANCES ELSEWHERE.

THE TROUBLE IN NEWARK, N. J.

There were some riotous demonstrations in Newark on Tuesday evening. A mob again assembled in front of the Mercury office. They were addressed by Mayor BIGELOW and Gen. RUNYON. The remarks of the latter, which are thus reported in the Mercury, are significant:

He said that he was in the first class of the Conscription act, and therefore was as much interested as themselves, and had a right to address them on a subject so vital to them all. [Cries of "You have, General;" "Go on;" "Give it to them;" "We'll listen to you," etc.] It was the opinion of many legal gentlemen, himself included, that the act in question was unconstitutional, and therefore could not be enforced. If the powers in authority in New-York and New-Jersey did not take measures to prevent the enforcement of the draft, why they were different men than they were thought to be when they were voted for. Gov. Seymour had sent to Washington to have the draft postponed; for that matter it was postponed now. [Laughter, and cries of "We'll postpone it here, too," and cheers.] If Joel Parker did not have the draft postponed or the act contested in this State, he was more of a coward than he believed him to be.

He would take a message down to Gov. PARKER tomorrow, giving the sentiments of the people, and use his influence with him (Gov. PARKER) to have the draft deferred altogether. If they were to be at the mercy of the party in power, the Administration he meant, they might as well know it at once. [Cries of "We'll not be at their mercy," "We'll not stand the draft," etc.]

The protest of the people had been effective before, and he believed it would be in this instance. The Administration would not enforce such a disagreeable act unless they were greater fools than they had yet shown themselves to be, and that was saying a good deal. [Laughter.]

If the State authorities would not, or could not protect them, then it would be time to do something else, but he entreated them for God's sake not to do any unlawful acts in the meantime, and so give the party in power an excuse for placing the city under martial law, which was no law at all.

He closed by repeating that he would himself go to the Governor, and tell him the aspect of the popular feeling.

He then moved that they adjourn; which motion was seconded and carried unanimously, and with great cheers for Gen. RUNYON, Mayor BIGELOW and others, the mob adjourned—to the street in front of our office.

All the police officers, the Chief, Captain, and some of the Lieutenants and privates, were upon the ground, and did excellent service in dispersing the crowd.

Partly through their efforts, and partly through an uneasy fear of the consequences if an attack was made, (the idea prevailing that the building would be defended at all hazards,) the gathering gradually dwindled down, so that by 10½ o'clock not more than twenty-five idlers were in the vicinity. Some of the crowd expressed a determination to tear up the track of the New-Jersey Railroad, either last night or to-day, and thus prevent the transportation of troops through to New-York, but we have not heard that anything of the kind has been done.

RHODE ISLAND.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES.

From the Providence Journal, July 15.

In consequence of the insurrectionary movements in the Cities of New-York and Boston, it has been deemed best by the Governor to take such precautionary steps as the occasion demands, although there is no ground to suppose that any effort will be made in this city to override the constituted authorities.

Gov. SMITH has, with his customary promptness, issued the following order, which must have the effect of causing our citizens to feel that a sufficient force has been put under arms to preclude the possibility of there being any disturbance here.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, &c.
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
PROVIDENCE, July 14, 1863.

SPECIAL ORDERS No. 59.—Gen. C. T. ROBBINS is directed to at once detail 800 men from the Second brigade for special service. He will also direct Gens. ARNOLD and TOURTELLOT to detail from their several brigades such force as may be necessary to protect the property of the State or prevent any disturbance of the public peace.

The Quartermaster-General will answer all necessary requisitions for arms, ammunition, equipments and quarters.

Capt. CARNDALL, Assistant Commissary-General, will provide rations for 1,000 men until further orders.

By order of the Commander-in-Chief.

EDWARD C. MAURAN, Adjutant-General.

CONNECTICUT.

A CALL FROM THE GOVERNOR FOR A HOME GUARD.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
OFFICE OF COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF,
HARTFORD, July 14, 1863.

For the purpose of aiding civil officers in the execution of the laws of this State, and of the United States, I hereby invite the services of patriotic citizens, in numbers sufficient to organize two or more battalions of infantry, which will be organized, armed, and equipped for three months' State service, unless sooner discharged, in accordance with orders, which will be immediately issued.

WM. A. BUCKINGHAM,
Commander-in-Chief.

LESSONS OF THE RIOT.

AS IT IS VIEWED IN WASHINGTON.

From the Washington Intelligencer, July 15.

It is in the City of New-York that the first attempt at organized resistance has been made.

The duty of the Government in this exigency is plain. The law must be enforced if it is not loyally obeyed. There is no other alternative. In a Government of laws there can be no other, and if a nation of freemen will not submit to be governed by the arbitrary will of a few in public places, just as little can they submit to be governed by the caprices of that many-headed monster, the mob. Let all those in office stand by the law which girds them with strength, and let the people learn that in this day of giddiness and revolt the only stability of our times is to be found in loyal obedience to lawful authority. It was said many years ago by that mocker at free government, THOMAS CARLYLE, that our political institutions were "anarchy, plus a constable." At the present time, when our constabulary forces have been taken on the form of vast armies, organized for the enforcement of the laws and the suppression of an armed sedition, let not this taunt be rendered only the more stinging because of revolt springing up among those who are putting down revolt. The Government must suppress such tumultuous uprisings with a heavy hand, but the wise surgeon, while he applies the knife and cautery to the extermination of the tumor or the blotch, will not neglect a pathology of the symptoms by which the origin of these disorders may be traced.

From the Washington Star.

All the evidence goes to shew that the plot to resist the draft in New-York City had been fully organized previously. Mr. MOSES SWEETZER, who came as passenger from Boston, passing through New-York City by the last train Saturday evening, says that a Copperhead who got into the cars on his way to New-Brunswick, N. J., appeared much excited; told Mr. SWEETZER that he was a peace man, and that the citizens of New-York would not submit to the conscription or draft; that he left the City fearing a great mob Saturday night, and wished to get out of the excitement; said they were organized thoroughly, and if the authorities attempted to enforce the draft, they would call out thirty thousand men and would lay the city in ashes! This man was as boastful as cowardly in his style of talk; said he had been in public office for the past eleven years, and the time had now come to stop the war, the draft, &c., and they were determined to do it.

It is stated on the street to-day that Government will leave the suppression of the riot to the State and City authorities, as a matter of justice to them, contenting itself with protecting its own property there.

IN ALBANY.

From the Evening Journal, July 14.

The news of the riot in New-York will cause joy to our enemies the world over. The rebels will take heart from it. They will see—or think they see—in it a sign of reaction against the war for the Union and of the demoralization of Northern society. English tories and French imperialists will see in it a fresh illustration of the failure of free institutions and a fresh argument for intervention to save us from the consequences of our madness. The London Times will indite fresh diatribes against us; the Saturday Review, and the whole pack of journalistic curs, will be "after" us in more vigorous chase than ever.

The time to retort has not yet arrived. We must be content to rest under the stigma for a while. Just now the elements of discord are rampant, and lawlessness and brutality have full sway. But the storm will pass away. The disturbers of the public peace will be brought to punishment. Law and order will resume their accustomed sway. Northern society is, we will still believe, sound at the core. It will vindicate its conservative character in good time. It will prove to the world that it is possessed of sufficient healthful vitality to resist every effort and agency of disturbance.

Let patriots be of good cheer. We are in the midst of a crisis. We may be sorely tried before it is over; anarchy may rule for the hour; but the supremacy of law will be vindicated in the end. The ligaments that bind social forces together will be all the stronger for the strain to which they have been subjected. There is not a single instance in history where lawless violence has been successful in the accomplishment of its object. It will not be successful now.

OBITUARY.

Death of Rev. Dr. Hale.

Rev. Dr. Hale, formerly President of Hobart College, New-York, died suddenly at his residence in Newburyport, Mass., on Wednesday night, of disease of the heart. The state of his health had been feeble but for a short time, and his friends did not anticipate a fatal result until last Monday. The funeral services are to take place to-day at St. Paul's Church, Newburyport.

Dr. Hale will long be remembered in the threefold character of a Minister of the Gospel, an educator of youth, and an author. During his busy and useful life he was connected, in important official capacities, with five of the Collegiate institutions of the country, to wit: as principal of the Saco, Me., Academy; as tutor in geometry and natural philosophy in Bowdoin College, Me.; as principal of the Gardiner, Me., Lyceum; as professor of chemistry and mineralogy in Dartmouth College, N. H., and lastly as President of Geneva (now Hobart Free) College, in this State, which last office he filled most acceptably for twenty years.

Born in old Newbury, (now Newburyport,) Mass., in 1797, the subject of our reminiscence graduated with honor at Bowdoin College, in 1818, and immediately became principal of the Saco Academy. In 1819, he entered the Theological Seminary, Andover, Mass., and became a Congregational preacher in 1822. The four years thereafter he spent as a tutor in Bowdoin, and as the President of the Gardiner Lyceum. In 1827, he was called to Hanover College, N. H., as Professor of two important branches of learning, and held that office until it was abolished by the Trustees in 1835. During his incumbency, he delivered lectures on chemistry, pharmacy, medical jurisprudence, and natural philosophy, and laid the foundation of the College's extensive and valuable geological and mineralogical cabinet, and moreover, he himself was the architect in the reconstruction of the building.

After his return from a visit to the West Indies, whither he went for his health, in the Summer of 1836, Dr. Hale was elected to the Presidency of Hobart College, in Geneva, N. Y. In 1852-3, he made a brief visit to Europe, and in 1856 he resigned the Presidency, since which time he has lived in retirement in his native place.

He was the author of several scientific and professional works, but his main and successful endeavor, after leaving Dartmouth, was the building up of the excellent institution in this State, in which there should be combined with the highest intellectual culture of the mind the systematic and correct training of the heart in the religion of the Gospel and the Church of Christ.

President Hale was ever the Christian gentleman and scholar, faithfully discharging the duties of his responsible position, and at the same time enjoying the respect and love of all with whom, in social and friendly relations, he was brought in contact.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

A circular from the War Department, dated yesterday, announces that the draft is to be immediately proceeded with and enforced, and directs the Provost-Marshals to take measures at once for carrying out the same. An adequate force has been ordered by the Government to the points where proceedings have been interrupted.

VALLANDIGHAM is at Niagara Falls.

A letter in the Boston Herald, from the vicinity of Charleston, dated the 12th, states that the grand final assault on the Charleston defences was to be made on Tuesday the 14th. Dispatches from Philadelphia state that information has reached the Government through Gen. ROSECRANS that the assault was made on that day, and that it was successful. The Chattanoga Rebel is given as the authority.

A dispatch from Cairo to the Cincinnati Gazette states that a battle was fought on the 8th at a point beyond the Big Black, resulting disastrously to the rebels. Eighteen hundred prisoners had been brought into Vicksburgh from the battle-field. Gen. SHERMAN is in command of a large force outside of Big Black. Few casualities are reported among our troops during the late fights beyond the Black River. A rumor prevailed that Gen. OSTERHAUS was killed in battle on the 8th, but it was altogether discredited in the best informed circles. From Southern sources it is stated that our forces have occupied Meridian, on the Jackson and Mobile Railroad.

We have, this morning, an extremely interesting collection of Southern news, from files of Richmond and other Southern papers which have reached us. The tone of the papers is rather despondent, though an effort is made to put on a bold face in regard to the recent rebel reverses. The Enquirer, however, is constrained to say that the fall of Vicksburgh, the retreat of BRAGG, the repulse of LEE, and the advance on Charleston, are all serious disasters—the most serious since the beginning of the war. The Enquirer publishes the letter of instructions from JEFF. DAVIS to ALEX. H. STEPHENS, on the occasion of his late attempted mission to Washington. It turns out that the mission had no political importance, but was simply what JEFF. DAVIS styles "one of humanity." Mr. STEPHENS, in an accompanying letter, details his experience in attempting to get through our lines. The capitulation of Vicksburgh is announced to the rebel War Department in a dispatch from JOE JOHNSTON, dated at Jackson, the 7th. There are also dispatches from Jackson, as late as the 12th, giving some indications of the progress of Gen. SHERMAN in his campaign against JOHNSTON. At that date he had invested Jackson, and was vigorously shelling the place. We shall probably soon hear of the destruction of the rebel force there.

It is thought at Fortress Monroe that Gen. FOSTER will take command there in place of Gen. DIX, who comes to the Department of the East.

A dispatch from Fortress Monroe states that there are now no rebel troops on the Blackwater, they all having been withdrawn for the defence of Richmond.

Fort Powhatan, which was taken possession of by our gunboats on the 13th, is on the south side of James River, and about 80 miles from its mouth.

We have a report from Portland of heavy firing heard, between 10 and 11 o'clock yesterday forenoon, about fifteen miles southeast of the harbor, apparently broadsides from the vessels.

Parties from Helena, arrived at Cairo, state that Gen. BLUNT has captured Little Rock, with a large number of prisoners.

GENERAL NEWS.

Since the fight between the military and the mob in Second-avenue, on Thursday night, there has been no fresh disturbance of the peace by the rioters deserving of notice, and there is little doubt that the usual quiet and order of the City are again permanently restored. The precautions of the authorities have not, however, been abated, and should there be a renewal of the outbreak, the preparations are such as to secure its prompt suppression and to vindicate the majesty of the law.

The rowdies of Portsmouth, N. H., attempted to get up a riot in that city on Thursday night, but they were speedily and thoroughly squelched by the Mayor with a posse of police and citizens. There has been no further trouble in Boston or Troy, and elsewhere the draft is proceeding without difficulty.

The ship Southern Cross, which was burned by the pirate Florida, was owned by Messrs. BARRON & MORRILL, of this City, and was valued at $40,000. The ship and freight money were insured by a war risk to the amount of $55,000, at offices in this City. The cargo, which was probably owned by foreign parties, was worth about $35,000.

The business on the Stock Exchange has resumed its recent activity, and the market is a rising one on nearly all the speculative shares, and firm for Government Stocks. The price of Gold Coin fell yesterday to 125¼ ₱ cent.; Exchange 138½@139 ₱ cent. Money easy.

Heavier sales of Flour, Wheat and Corn were reported yesterday at irregular prices, as also of Pork, Lard and Tallow, which we quoted firmer. Hay was in fair demand. Whisky was selling rather more freely, and was advancing. Groceries were lightly dealt in. Most other articles were inactive. The Freight engagements were to a fair extent, chiefly for Liverpool.

THE DRAFT HERE AND ELSEWHERE.—We continue to receive announcements, by telegraph, from cities in all parts of the country—from Boston, Lowell, Springfield, New-Haven, Philadelphia, and scores of others of less note—to the effect that the draft is proceeding, and in some cases has concluded, and that perfect peace and quiet prevail. How is this? Are there no poor men except in New-York? Has every drafted man "$300" exemption money, except in this poverty-stricken City? Is the Conscription equal and fair in all other cities, and only a hardship and a tyranny here? We wait for an explanation of the singular facts here presented.

The Laws and the Mob.

There is nothing which needs to be impressed more strongly on people's minds just now, than the fact—for fact it is—that the question which we have to decide in the next few days is not simply whether the United States army shall be recruited by draft, but in whose hands the resources of the country, its means of offence and defence are to be lodged in time of war, or of other public danger or difficulty. We must not forget that this rebellion is the first great peril of a young and inexperienced nation, and that every one of our acts and declarations at this crisis will be a precedent for the guidance and direction of future generations. Great and desperate as is the struggle in which we are now engaged, greater and more desperate struggles are doubtless still in store for us, and it is more than likely that even should the Government ride out the present storm in safety, its salvation at some later period will depend on the nature of the example which we are about to set.

The great consideration now is, therefore, not whether a draft shall be made, but who shall decide whether it ought to be made or not. Shall the validity or invalidity of acts of Congress be left to the Courts, or to "the public sentiment," as expressed by crowds in the streets of the localities which are affected by it? Is the Executive to wait for the sanction of newspapers and stump orators before executing the statutes, or to be guided by its own sense of right? Are we, when we go to war, to allow crowds of the most ignorant portion of the community, drawn from the slums of our great cities, to decide for us, bludgeon in hand, both upon its policy and upon the best means of carrying it on?

When Gov. SEYMOUR addressed the mob the other day from the steps of the City Hall, and informed it, red-handed as it was from the commission of almost every crime in the decalogue, that he had sent his Adjutant-General to Washington to request the Government to suspend the draft, he was not simply seeking to appease a tumult. He was proclaiming, with all the authority attaching to his character and official position, that mob law ought under certain circumstances to override that of Congress; that the Executive, if it meet with resistance of any kind on the part of numbers, ought to recoil before it; and that in short, the opposition of a few thousand day-laborers, thieves, and prostitutes, expressed by means of murder, pillage and arson, ought to cause the President to modify his manner of executing the laws.

There is no use in maundering about "bloodshed and confusion." This is what any retreat on the part of the Government on this question of the draft in New-York will mean, and nothing less. This is what the bands of ruffians, who have during the last three days brought shame not only on the American name, but on humanity, will understand it to mean. They are as ferocious and cruel as wild beasts, but they are far more cunning. They know well that their victory, if victory they are to have, will not simply be an escape from soldiering, but the establishment of a principle. If they can defeat the Enrollment act by violence, and with the connivance of the State authorities, they can defeat any other act. If they can refuse to furnish men in this way, they can refuse to furnish money, or to obey legal process, and may, in fact, at any moment that the traitors who instigate them choose to fix for the ruin of their country, paralyze the National arm in the presence of the enemy, by placing life and property in danger in the great towns. To place every peaceable, decent, honest citizen in mortal fear for the safety of his person, property and family, is now clearly their game; and in playing it they are literally serving the cause of the enemy more effectually than if they furnished cavalry to him to desolate the country.

If we submit to the construction which Gov. SEYMOUR and his associates evidently wish to place on the atrocities of the last few days, it is not Democracy we shall have established, but something baser, viler, and more dangerous and more despicable, than any form of Government ever found outside a pirate's cave. If we permit this principle to be incorporated into our constitutional jurisprudence, and allow the honors of a revolution to be bestowed on the acts of the band who have been burning down orphan asylums as a political demonstration, we shall have asked, as fairly as men can ask, for our exclusion from the family of Christian nations. No civilized Government could in decency maintain relations of amity with a community of cowards, bullied by cutthroats, and governed in their greatest straits by hordes of thieves. The nearest approach to sympathy with us which any people that respected itself could possibly manifest would be pity, and we should have commenced our downward progress on a path which would conduct us rapidly from one "base compliance" to another, until, after having seen civilization and even property imperiled, despotism would come to us as such a relief that we should all look back with astonishment to the time when we set any value on liberty.

MAYOR OPDYKE.—We owe it to the Mayor of this City to say that his conduct, during the riot which has convulsed and disgraced this City, has been all that could have been asked or expected at his hands. He has met the emergency with firmness and with prudence, and to his counsels, in cases where he has had no power, is largely due, we have good reason for believing, much of the vigor with which the riot has been resisted by the public authorities. It must be remembered that the Mayor has no actual force at his control. With the Police he has nothing to do; the Governor, on his arrival, took command of the militia, and the National Government appointed a commander for the National forces. This leaves to the Mayor very little but moral power with which to confront the mob; and in the exercise of this, as of whatever other authority he has had, Mayor OPDYKE has certainly deserved well of the public.

Aid for the Injured.

The suggestion was casually made in conversation yesterday in a party of three gentlemen, that something ought to be done for the families of those members of the Police, Fire and Military Departments who have been killed or injured in the defence of law and order and in the protection of life and property during the recent riots. A paper was at once put in circulation, and in less than two hours nearly twenty thousand dollars was subscribed. The utmost alacrity was shown by every one to contribute to so excellent an object:—and we run no risk in saying that before night at least $50,000 will have been contributed for this purpose. The men who have had property exposed to the depredations of the lawless mob, are quick to recognise and prompt to meet the obligations they owe to those who have so nobly interposed for its protection.

No words can state too strongly the debt of gratitude which this City owes to the handful of men who have breasted the fury of this ferocious mob. During Monday the Police bore the whole brunt of the storm; and it is to the unflinching courage and admirable tenacity with which they resisted, step by step, the onset of the mob, that we owe the check that was finally put upon its depredations. Less than a thousand policemen, scattered over this large City, without any warning of the coming tempest, were suddenly required to face and withstand a raging mob of tens of thousands of reckless and infuriated madmen. But for their vigorous and heroic efforts on that day, the destruction of life and property in the City would have been tenfold what it was. The firemen behaved with equal courage and devotion, doing everything in their power to extinguish the flames which the rioters had kindled, and promptly responding to every summons of the fire alarm. And the volunteer patrolmen, the organized and extemporized military companies, and all those among our citizens who have volunteered their services in quelling the riot, have earned the thanks of the great body of our citizens by their courageous and admirable conduct throughout the whole affair.

Very many of these several classes of persons have lost their lives, and many more have been seriously injured, in their devotion to the public service. They have families dependent on them, and rely, many of them, wholly on their own efforts for their own support. It is eminently proper that they should receive prompt and liberal aid from those in whose behalf they have sacrificed so much. We are glad to know that their claims will be promptly recognized and liberally met.

Justice to the Victims.

There are not spires enough in this City to avert the wrath of Heaven, if something is not speedily done to lighten the awful misery which this mob has brought upon our colored population. It is not sufficient to lift from them the nightmare of terror. They have physical wants that must be provided for, or they will perish. Hundreds of women and children have been forever deprived by murderous hands of those whose daily labor was their sole dependence. Hundreds of them have been plundered of their clothing and of every article of their personal property. Thousands of them have been kept by violence from their work, and thus left with their families exposed to starvation. They are all, in the present condition of things, absolutely helpless. They can make no appeal. They can do nothing but hide and crouch, terror-stricken and famishing. The movement for their relief cannot come from them. They can at best only be passive. Just men must think and act for them, and do it promptly, too, or themselves become partners in the dreadful guilt.

First of all, the City Government has a duty. It is bound to see that every dollar's worth of the property of these poor people which has been destroyed is made good to them. The City, of course, is legally liable, as for the losses of the white people. But these latter with their superior intelligence know how to obtain their indemnity, and there is no danger that they will not promptly enough assert their rights. But these poor people are in most cases too ignorant to know how to proceed, and, what is still worse, they have been too much accustomed to every form of wrong to have any hope or courage in trying to get redress. It should be made the special business of a Committee, in the Common Council, to ascertain these damages, and see that compensation is speedily made. Inaction would be superlatively cruel, and delay would be only little less so. It matters little whether you relieve an absolutely destitute man next month or never.

But there should be private action, too. The Christianity of the City should make haste to purge itself of all connection with the infernal doings of the week. In its churches, to-morrow, it should contribute liberally to the relief of the wronged, thousands of whom profess to be, and truly are, disciples of the same Master. It should be the pleasure of all true men to join in the same charity. And still further, every such man will take care to do his part toward restoring these poor people to employment, and to sustain them in its peaceful prosecution. These colored people have a right to live—an infinitely better right, so long as they behave themselves, than the miscreants who persecute them.

The shallow pretext that these colored people injuriously compete with white labor, is beneath contempt. At no time for years has manual labor been in greater demand, in this City and county, than now, owing to the great drain of able-bodied men into the war. The labor of all is needed, and no white man is prejudiced by the work of the black man. But supposing it were otherwise—that there were an actual competition, we should like to know how that is to impair the black man's right or his duty to earn a livelihood. Who has a better right to find work in the country than he who was born in the country? Who has a fairer claim to keep clear of the almshouse than he who from childhood has considered the almshouse a disgrace? But, as we have said, there is no competition in the case. On all sides labor finds more than it can do. The Irishman might as well quarrel with the black man for taking up too much of the atmosphere as for encroaching upon the labor-market. Every willing hand, white or black, is now, more than ever, in demand; and more than ever, too, a public benefit.

We have never sought to excite hostility against any race. In other days we did what we could to shield the Irish when they were fleeing before frantic mobs—mobs, we may add, that were instigated by one at least of the very Presses which have instigated the population which were then the victims, to make the present attack upon a race which never did them injury. When justice is concerned, we make no account of race: unless it be to recognise that the weaker the race the higher the claim to just treatment. We affirm that it is impossible for any man of Christian principle, or even the moral principle of the Pagan standard, to dispute that our colored population have been dreadfully wronged in these riots. If that be true, there is no escape from the public and private obligation to repair the wrong so far as it is possible. If New-York fails to do this, it will forever stand as the foulest blot in her history.

The Soldiers and the Rioters.

It must be the most painful and humiliating event of all the war to our brave soldiers, that, after voluntarily taking upon themselves the defence of the nation against its foes, and spending months and years in the midst of the hardships and perils of warfare, they are called home at last to maintain, against ingrates and cowards here, the very laws that they went forth to defend. It is no longer the fire in front that galls. Thanks to the self-denying services and successful courage of those tried and true heroes, the rebel armies are repulsed from every front.

But just at this opportune and highly favored moment, when only one more blow is needed to crush the foe and save the Republic—when our long-serving and faithful armies, worn out in marching and fighting, need help to give that finishing blow—a craven crowd that has remained out of harm's way during all the fight, rises in insurrection, and would throw away all the advantages and fruits of victory that two and a half years of hard fighting have won!

It seems to be enough to crush the spirit of our soldiers to find so much selfishness and ingratitude among the men at home that have never shouldered a gun or marched a mile in the nation's defence. It would crush their spirit, did they not believe that, with all the meanness manifested, there is yet an overwhelming majority of truly patriotic sentiment in the country that will see justice done them, and enough of the lusty laggards that have lain so long at home, enjoying the luxuries of peace, compelled to do a part of the hard and dangerous work that they have been performing. They have reason to feel indignant that all the burdens of the war should be sought to be thrust upon them—as if they had no families to leave, no business to abandon, no losses to sustain, no limbs and lives to lose, when they enlisted and went to camp and to the field as soldiers of the United States.

There are many shallow and misguided persons who assume that the majority of the soldiers who are now in the National service belong to the very classes in the North that are making violent opposition to the Conscription. And on this assumption, these reasoners reach the conclusion that the soldiers in the field will remain in sympathy with the masses from whose midst they are claimed to have gone forth.

But, in the first place, it is entirely untrue that our noble volunteer army, composed of the farmers, mechanics, professional men, and intelligent workingmen of the North, is in any way analogous in its composition to the atrocious mob which has been holding a carnival of devilry in our streets. Further, so far as the assumed fact is relied on to make insurrection safe, it will prove a terrible and fatal delusion. Whatever may have been the former associations and opinions of the soldiers so long in the field, these at least may be affirmed as beyond all question their present and predominant sentiments: 1. That they have fought long and well for the country, and have suffered their full share of the privations and horrors of war. 2. That it is the duty of those citizens who have remained at home since the war began, to contribute now their part to the common defence by shouldering muskets and going into the ranks.

The soldiers are right and just in these conclusions. It is natural that they should have them. Their education in hardships has disinclined them to be imposed on. And they will not be imposed on by unpatriotic men who have staid at home two years, while themselves have marched, camped, suffered and fought two years.

It need surprise no one, therefore, least of all the mobocrats of this City, to learn that soldiers in the field receive the news of opposition to the Conscription law with surprise and indignation, and that they march promptly if not joyfully, when ordered back to enforce the laws that shall compel other men to serve, as they have served, in the army.

Let the opponents of the Conscription, whether they be but mild denouncers of it, or riotous and murdering resistants of it, answer to the veteran regiments now returning from the war, why any of the wrathful mob of New-York should not be compelled to do the same military service that the scarred and maimed men, their late neighbors now returning from the field, have performed?

Archbishop Hughes and the Rioters.

We were surprised to learn yesterday that the call purporting to be issued by Archbishop HUGHES "to the men of New-York, who are now called in many of the papers rioters," was a genuine document. It did not seem to us possible that any person holding a position of so much dignity and responsibility could say a word which could be construed to imply that he did not regard as "rioters" men who had burned down public buildings, plundered private dwellings, set fire to orphan asylums, assailed with bludgeons and stones the legal defenders of the public peace, hung innocent and defenceless men, murdered, with every conceivable brutality, the officers of justice, and done everything which men could do to overthrow the law and plunge society into the very depths of anarchy and crime. If the mob had burned the Catholic Orphan Asylum next door to the Bishop's Cathedral, somebody beside "the papers" would probably have called them "rioters"—that Archbishop HUGHES could regard the term as less applicable to the men who burned the Colored Orphan Asylum, seemed to us incredible. Nor did we dream for a moment that in a City convulsed with a bloody and raging riot, Archbishop HUGHES could presume to call a meeting of the rioters, and, of his own authority, say to them, "you shall not be disturbed by any exhibition of municipal or military presence." Such an assurance implies the assumption of a power superior to that of the law; and whatever the Archbishop might feel, we did not think he would be unwise enough openly to proclaim the possession of such a personal or official supremacy.

For these reasons, when we first saw the call we pronounced it spurious. We regret to say, for the Archbishop's sake, that in this we were mistaken. The call was genuine. The meeting of "the men called rioters" was summoned and was held; and in another column will be found a report of the speech made by the Archbishop on that occasion. Its aim, as will be seen, was to dissuade the rioters from any further riotous proceedings, by showing them that in this country there is a peaceful and effective remedy for all political evils, and that it is the interest as well as the duty of every citizen to resort to that alone. Without being an able speech in any respect, it was reasonably well suited to the object it was designed to accomplish, and we trust that in this it may be successful.

HOME GUARDS.—We are glad that the citizens are so generally organizing into Home Guards and other associations for the defence of the City. It is shameful to us that it should be necessary to send here the war-worn regiments of the Army of the Potomac to keep the peace in our streets. There are enough law-abiding citizens here to crush out all the felons and rioters in the City, though they were ten times more numerous than they are. We ought to do it. It is an excellent opportunity for our citizens of all classes to exercise themselves in military drill and perfect themselves in military manœuvres. If regiments are to be sent from MEADE's army to put down the wretched demonstrations in all the cities of the North where they have taken place, it will weaken our army so that we need not look for an effective pursuit of LEE, nor for the crushing out of the great rebellion until a considerable time after the conscription is enforced. Let us attend to our own defence, while our gallant army in the field attends to the enemy.

BALTIMORE AND NEW-YORK.—There was a statement in one of the papers that reinforcements for the New-York mob were arriving from the Plug-Uglies and other clubs in Baltimore. Those who know the political sentiment of this, and the other associations that comprise what are called the fighting men of Baltimore, saw at once the absurdity of the statement. Reinforcements for the upholders of law and order in the City, however, could easily have been had from Baltimore. A letter from there states that two regiments of Union League men, armed and drilled, would have been instantly sent here on any day of this week to assist in putting down the mob. It is but two years since regiments from this City marched to Baltimore to put down a desperate secession mob in that city, but so great has been the growth of loyalty there that the city is now in turn prepared to help New-York. In Baltimore they have now an excellent regiment of colored soldiers, beside thirty-five hundred drilled negro laborers on the ramparts. Contrast this with the treatment of unoffending blacks in this City. In loyalty, Baltimore is now the model for us.

STEPHENS' SECRET.—Perhaps JEFF. DAVIS' instructions to Vice-President STEPHENS on the occasion of his late attempted mission to Washington, reveal the real object of that mission, and perhaps not. Ostensibly, the object was, in DAVIS's own words, "to place this war on the footing of such as are waged by civilized people in modern times, and to divest it of the savage character which has been impressed on it by our enemies, in spite of all our efforts and protests." We do not see that there was any necessity of sending the Vice-President of the Confederacy to Washington in a Confederate steamer for this purpose. STEPHENS could have seen the officer in James River who is authorized by our Government to enter into negotiations with the rebel authorities on the subject. "The savage character impressed on the war by our enemies" is rather a remarkable expression, considering the treatment and terms given to the garrison at Vicksburgh by Gen. GRANT, on the day succeeding that on which DAVIS' letter is dated; and considering, also, our treatment of the ten thousand rebel wounded who were deserted by the rebel surgeons, and left on the field at Gettysburgh. There never was such humanity shown to a foe in any war as we have shown toward the rebels in this war, and on every occasion. But the likelihood is that STEPHENS, in his visit to Washington, had other ends to serve than those which appear in his letter of instructions.

THE RAREE ARMY.—Gen. MEADE sends to Washington thirty-one of the regimental battle-flags captured at the late battle of Gettysburgh. Thirteen of these were taken from Virginia infantry regiments, four from North Carolina regiments, two from Georgia regiments, one from an Alabama, one from a Mississippi and one from a Florida regiment, and nine were from regiments whose States were not known. These facts, and many others that have appeared from time to time, go to show that the bulk of LEE's army is made up of Virginians and North Carolinians. The greater part of the rebel army of the Southwest, comprising the regiments raised in the States of Mississippi and Alabama, and the States west of the Mississippi River, has been captured as prisoners of war by Gens. GRANT and BANKS. The army of Gen. BRAGG is composed mainly of regiments from Tennessee, Georgia and Kentucky, with others from the Gulf States; but a large part of the Tennesseeans and Kentuckians deserted lately when he fell back into Georgia. All the rebel armies are in a very bad way at present.

☞ The Troy Daily Times, the material of which was destroyed by the mob on Wednesday, resumed its publication yesterday. It is an energetic, vigorous and successful newspaper, and will be aided rather than injured by this attempt to silence it by brute force.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 17.

THE REBEL ARMY.

The main body of the rebel army is reported to be at Winchester, and moving rapidly down the valley toward Culpepper, where it will be joined by reinforcements from Richmond. The most of BRAGG's army is said to have arrived there, and also some troops from Mobile and Eastern Tennessee. The rebels are believed to be strengthening their works around Richmond, mounting them with guns brought from the sea-coast fortifications.

REBELS IN OUR HANDS.

The number of rebel officers, ranking from Lieutenant-Generals down to Ensigns, now in our hands, is estimated by the authorities here at over five thousand. Retaliation will be a dangerous game to play at.

Following is a nearly correct statement of the number of rebel prisoners known to be in our hands. It is below rather than above the actual mark:

|---|---|
| On hand at Memphis | 4,000 |
| At Fort Delaware | 8,000 |
| Captured by Gen. Grant | 31,300 |
| Captured by Gen. Sherman | 2,000 |
| Captured by Gen. Banks | 12,000 |
| Captured by Gen. Prentiss | 2,000 |
| Captured by Gen. Rosecrans | 8,000 |
| Captured by Gen. Meade | 24,000 |
| Total | 86,300 |

THE DRAFT.

The statement made by the New-York Post, that the draft was to be suspended for technical reasons in relation to the difficulty of ascertaining the true credit to be given for thirty-day militia, is incorrect. No such question has arisen, or been presented to the Provost-Marshal-General.

GEN. COUCH.

Maj.-Gen. COUCH arrived here to-day, and had a lengthy interview with the Secretary of War.

GEN. KEYES.

Gen. KEYES is relieved of his command at Fortress Monroe, and placed on the Army Retired Board, in place of Col. SACKETT, relieved.

REVENUE DECISION.

Upon a question submitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as to whether moneys belonging to a State and deposited by State authority in any bank are liable to tax in the same manner as deposits by private persons, it has been decided that the law makes no difference as to persons by whom deposits are made. The consideration which induced the tax was the privilege enjoyed by the banks to use moneys deposited with them, and to make profit by them in their business. Hence it becomes a matter of no consequence by whom or what authority the deposits are made.

BOUNTY DECISIONS.

Secretary STANTON has decided that a non-commissioned officer who has been discharged for promotion before his time expires, is entitled to a bounty of $100. This decision was made in response to a letter from J. C. WETMORE, the Ohio State Agent.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The Indian Agent for the upper Arkansas District, in the official communication dated Colorado, 30th ult., speaks of visiting the Caddoes and other Indians, thirty miles south of Fort Larned. They were destitute of both clothing and provisions, having been robbed of everything by the rebels before leaving Texas. But for the abundance of the buffalo they would have starved. The Agent ministered to their necessities. They say they will always remain loyal and would celebrate the 4th of July as has been their custom. Other Indians from Texas will soon join them. Those remaining in Texas are in a deplorable condition, having been plundered of all their stock to feed the rebel troops, a large body of whom were on the Red River moving Northwest. Gov. DOTY has made important treaties with the Indians in Utah, thus additionally securing safety to emigrants.

IMPORTANT---IF TRUE.

Reported Capture of Charleston on July 14.

Beauregard Said to Have Evacuated and Burned the City.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, July 17.

The Inquirer, of this city, has the following posted on their bulletin board:

"Information from Washington, received here, leads to the belief that Charleston was captured on the 14th instant."

Another report on the streets is as follows:

"Gen. BEAUREGARD has evacuated and burnt Charleston."

This last statement is said to have come via Chattanooga.

A rebel picket is reported to have told the story.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, July 17.

It is understood, on good authority, that the Government has received a dispatch from Gen. ROSECRANS' headquarters, stating that the Chattanooga Rebel announces the capture of Charleston on the 14th instant.

THE ATTACK ON CHARLESTON.

The Preparations for the Grand Final Assault.

BOSTON, Friday, July 17.

A letter to the Boston Herald, dated off Charleston, July 12, says the grand and final attack was assigned for Tuesday, the 14th.

The letter says: Everything is working well here. Morris Island is ours. Charleston and the forts are completely besieged. Five iron-clads and fifteen gunboats are off Sumter. Ten gunboats, one 40-gun frigate, and the New Ironsides will come over the bar to-night at high water. Three more iron-clads will arrive this afternoon. Six hundred fresh men to assist in the iron-clads and gunboats have arrived. Batteries, with heavy 200-pounder rifled guns, erected on Morris Island by our troops, will take part in the bombardment of Sumter.

THE FALL OF PORT HUDSON.

Interesting Particulars of the Surrender.

Special Dispatch to the Detroit Free Press.

VICKSBURGH, Miss., 10, via CAIRO, July 15, 1863.

The gunboat Arizona has just arrived from Port Hudson with dispatches to Gen. GRANT, announcing the capitulation of that place on the 9th inst.

After the unsuccessful assaults upon the enemy's works—of which you have already been informed—Gen. BANKS labored to reduce the place by continuous bombardment and by closing all the avenues by which the enemy could procure a supply of provisions.

On the evening of the 7th Gen. GARDNER sent out a flag of truce; he had heard of the capitulation of Vicksburgh, and desired Gen. BANKS to give him such information as he might have concerning the truth or falsity of the rumor. Gen. BANKS sent him a copy of Gen. GRANT's dispatch, giving the full particulars of the capitulation of Vicksburgh. Gen. GARDNER then expressed his willingness to surrender upon the same terms. Gen. BANKS declined, and announced that he would accept nothing short of an unconditional surrender.

Gen. GARDNER had before expressed his determination to hold out to the last extremity, and seemed sanguine both of the ultimate success of the Confederate arms in holding the Mississippi, and in his own ability to defend his works until he should be relieved by an attack on Gen. BANKS' rear.

The intelligence of Gen. GRANT's splendid triumph at Vicksburgh, however, and the advance of a strong column into the interior of Mississippi, cutting off his expected relief, speedily dispelled Gen. GARDNER's hopes. Disheartened and discouraged by the news he had received, Gen. GARDNER surrendered his force unconditionally on the morning of July 8.

The garrison consisted of 7,000 effective men, in excellent condition. There were sixty pieces of artillery in the various batteries along the river and in the rear, many of them of very large calibre. The magazine contained an abundant supply of powder, but a small quantity of shot and shell. This deficiency accounts for the rebel firing having been so slack during the last two or three days' siege. Gen. GARDNER was evidently husbanding his resources to repel an anticipated assault, and had an abundant supply to work all guns for several days continuously, without entirely exhausting his supplies.

There was no beef in possession of the rebels at the time of the surrender. The flesh of mules had been dealt out for some time—short rations—to supply the want of beef. There were quite a number of mules inside the rebel works and an abundance of corn, sufficient to have lasted the garrison for a week longer, if they had had the heart to fight.

Gen. GARDNER is reported to have said after the surrender, that he expected Gen. GRANT with his army would come down from Vicksburgh and assume the conduct of the siege, and in that event his works would be examined and overpowered by superior numbers, and many of his men would be boy-oneted in the trenches before a surrender could be made.

Gen. HERRON's fine command, which, you will remember, is the Army of the Frontier, operating on the southwest Missouri line, and lately attached to Gen. GRANT's army, started this morning for Port Hudson, but on meeting the Arizona the fleet of transports returned to this place, and are now on their way up the Yazoo River. They will proceed as high as Yazoo City, and perhaps higher. Gen. HERRON's force is large enough to operate with advantage if an enemy can be found in that quarter.

There is nothing from SHERMAN since my dispatch of yesterday.

MORGAN'S RAID.

He is Making for the River at Pomeroy or Gallipolis.

CINCINNATI, Friday, July 17.

MORGAN's rebel forces passed through Piketon yesterday afternoon, going in the direction of Jackson. He is evidently making for the river via Pomeroy or Gallipolis.

HEAVY FIRING HEARD OFF PORTLAND.

PORTLAND, Me., Friday, July 17.

The captain of the steamer from New-York reports hearing about 10 o'clock twelve heavy guns south-southwest of Cape Elizabeth, apparently 18 or 20 miles off, he being within seven or eight miles of the vessels in a thick fog.

ANOTHER REPORT.

PORTLAND, Me., Friday, July 17.

A fisherman reports, coming up from Harpswell this morning, heard from 10 to 11 o'clock about 15 miles southeast from Portland heavy firing, apparently from two vessels firing broadsides. One vessel appeared to have heavier guns than the other.

LAW REPORTS.

The Test Case on the Constitutionality of the Draft.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.
Before Justice Barnard.

The People ex rel. J. B. McCaulay vs. Robert Murray, United States Marshal.—This was a writ of habeas corpus brought to liberate Dr. McCaulay, who was arrested by the United States Marshal, on a warrant issued by the United States Commissioner, for refusing to give his name to an enrolling officer for the conscription.

The United States District Attorney, Mr. Smith, appeared, and made a return to the writ, to the effect that, since issuing it, the relator had been discharged by the United States Commissioner.

Mr. Van Loon, for the relator, averred that his client had not been present at any such examination or disposal of his case by the Commissioner, and proposed to traverse this return, and show that Dr. McCaulay was still actually or constructively in custody.

Mr. Justice BARNARD ruled that the Doctor, having been returned as discharged, there was an end of the matter.

Mr. Tucker remarked that he supposed his client would be rearrested by the United States officers immediately.

Justice BARNARD thought not.

The case then terminated.

Highly Important Decision in Prize Case—A Vessel may Approach a Blockaded Port, to Ascertain the State of the Blockade, if she does so in Good Faith.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, JULY 17.
Before Judge Nelson.

The Bark Express and her Cargo vs. The United States.—NELSON, C. J.—This vessel and cargo were captured on the morning of the 28th November 1861, by the sloop-of-war Vincennes, at the mouth of the Mississippi, off the Southeast Pass, some three miles from the Balize. The vessel was under a charter party, entered into by the master at Rio Janeiro, 9th September, 1861, to ship a cargo of coffee to "New-Orleans or Mobile, as may be ordered by the charterers, and if the vessel, on arrival, be warned off by a blockading squadron, to proceed either to New-York, Baltimore or Philadelphia, which second place is likely to be named by the charterers previous to the departure of the vessel from Rio de Janeiro," if warned off New-Orleans or Mobile, the master to deliver at the port of discharge the order from the officer warning him off, &c.

On the 14th September, 1861, the master was instructed by the charterers to proceed to New-Orleans with his cargo (6,185 bags of coffee), and should the port be open upon arrival, the bill of lading indorsed would advise him to whom to deliver the cargo: should the port be blockaded, he would be warned off, and would then proceed direct to New-York. The vessel belonged to British subjects, residing in Hull, England, and had sailed from that port in May, 1861, with a cargo of coal and cast-iron shipping for Rio Janeiro, and on discharging her cargo, the vessel was put up for freight by the master, which led to the charter above referred to. The cargo on board belongs to the charterers, William Moore & Co., British and Brazilian subjects.

The only question in the case is, whether or not the vessel and cargo are subject to condemnation for attempting to break the blockade of the port of New-Orleans? Upon a perusal of the testimony in preparation and documentary proof, we are satisfied that there was no such intent on the part of the master or owner of the cargo; that on the contrary their purpose was to ascertain at the mouth of the Mississippi River by personal inquiry whether or not the port was actually blockaded. This we think was the bona fide intention of the parties. There has been no disguise of the purpose, as it is avowed in the charter party, and written instructions of the owners of the cargo and repeated by the master himself. And the only question is whether the master was justified under the circumstances disclosed in the case in making such inquiry.

It is quite apparent that these parties had adopted the construction of the proclamation of the President announcing an intent to set on foot a blockade of the Southern ports indicated by its terms, that a vessel sailing for a port in a state of blockade was entitled to a warning of one of the blockading vessels before a forfeiture would be enforced; and that acting upon this construction and consequent directions to be found in the charter party and instructions of the charterers the master persevered in the purpose of making the inquiry, although at the same time he had good reason for the belief that the port was in a state of actual blockade.

This interpretation of the proclamation was overruled by a majority of the Supreme Court in the case of the Hiawatha, and must be regarded, therefore, as affording no justification to either vessel or cargo. But, although the terms of the proclamation furnish no justification for the act, yet we think they are entitled to consideration when inquiring into the intent with which the master is sailing for the blockaded port, as the terms may have honestly misled him, and the fact of finding the vessel at a place under other circumstances suspicious, may, in view of these terms, be consistent with entire innocence.

There was no official notice of the blockade of the port of New-Orleans given by this Government to the British or Brazilian Governments. There is no evidence in this case when or at what time it was established. The case must stand upon a blockade de facto as it respects foreign neutral traders at the belligerent port. There was no doubt a general notoriety prevailed at Rio Janeiro at the time of sailing of the vessel from that place that the mouths of the Mississippi were blockaded, and the master of the vessel was advised in the course of the voyage by a vessel hailed, that he would be stopped at Balize.

There are undoubtedly cases which hold, as a general rule, that even in the case of a blockade de facto, the inquiry must not be made at the blockaded port, if reasonably practicable to ascertain the fact by inquiry at other neutral ports. There are exceptions to this rule, and under all the circumstances and proofs in this case, we are inclined to think the present is one of them.

Decree of the Court below reversed.

For the United States, the District-Attorney and Mr. Evarts; for the captors, Mr. Upton; for the cargo, Messrs. Larocque & Barlow, and W. H. Scott, Esq.; for the ship, Martin & Smith.

MEDICAL.

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by Dr. WARD & CO., No. 50 Lispenard-st., near Broadway, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 25 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and expense than any one can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call; it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate, call at once. By his special experience in this much neglected branch of medical science, he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhœa or Syphilis cured in a few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from Impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks. Permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. Persons at a distance failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to Dr. WARD, No. 50 Lispenard-st., the only place. Call, send or write.

SURE CURE—BY DR. POWERS, SUCCESSfully consulted with Dr. WARD, No. 50 Lispenard-st. Conducted on the plan of the Hospital des Venerlens, Paris, where those afflicted with any form of private disease can receive prompt treatment, without risk or exposure, viz.: Syphilis, gonorrhœa, gleet, strictures, ulcers, tumors, cancers, secondary and constitutional syphilis, diseases of the kidneys, &c., &c. Thirty years of extensive practice, exclusively devoted to the treatment of those complaints enable us to effect cures in cases where others of less experience have failed. Dr. Powers' Essence of Life restores the vigor of youth in four days. This marvelous agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitution—physical disqualifications, impediments to marriage, thereby speedily cured. The men to consult, Drs. Ward and Powers, the champions and kings of venereal diseases, possessing the most certain, speedy and only effectual remedies in the world, guaranteed a perfect cure, or no charge, in from one to three days. Established in 1840. N. B.—Those who have used their preventives are never without. Set for a circular. To Ladies.—Dr. Powers' Periodical Drops are a safe and certain remedy for monthly irregularities. The above remedies sent by mail. The afflicted should read their circular. Postage free, on receipt of a stamp. Cures warranted.

MANHOOD AND THE VIGOR OF YOUTH regained in three days by Dr. POWERS' ESSENCE OF LIFE. This wonderful agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitution, radically curing Seminal Weakness, Sexual Debility, and impediments to marriage generally; Nervousness, Mental and Physical Incapacity, resulting from self-abuse, &c. The time required to cure the most inveterate case is one week. Failure is impossible. This life-restoring remedy should be taken by all about to marry, as its effects are permanent. Young man, are you subject to that soul and body destroying disease, secret habits? Dr. POWERS' Invigorating Essence is a never-failing cure. Sold by WALTER POWERS, M. D., No. 50 Lispenard-st., between Broadway and Church-st., New-York.

IMPORTANT TO THE MARRIED AND THOSE ABOUT TO BE MARRIED.—Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, has just published the 160th edition of the valuable book, entitled "THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION," strictly intended for those whose health or circumstances forbid a too rapid increase of family. Price $1. Sold at his office, No. 129 Liberty-st., New-York; or can be sent by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States and Canada, by inclosing $1, and addressing Box No. 1,224 New-York City. For sale by H. RICHARDSON, at No. 1 Vesey-st., (Astor House,) and No. 18 Ann-st.; FREDERHEN & CO., 13 Court-st., Boston.

A PHYSIOLOGICAL VIEW OF MARRIAGE Containing nearly 300 pages, and 150 fine plates and engravings of the anatomy of the sexual organs, in a state of health and with a treatise on self-abuse, its deplorable consequences upon the mind and body, with the author's plan of treatment—the only rational and successful mode of cure, as shown by the report of cases treated. A truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain doubts of their physical condition. Sent, free of postage, to any address on receipt of 25 cents, in specie or postage-stamps. Address Dr. LA CROIX, No. 31 Maiden-lane, Albany, N. Y.

IMPORTANT—FOR THREE DOLLARS. Dr. C. BERY & CO. will send their specific for the sure cure of diseases brought on by secret habits and other improprieties, together with a receipt for its manufacture. Address Dr. C. BERY & CO., New-York.

DR. JOHNSON, NO. 14 DUANE-ST., MAY be consulted with confidence on private diseases. Thirty years in one specialty enables him to guarantee speedy and permanent cures. N. B.—Those who may have been misled by quack advertisements, nostrums, &c., can call on Dr. J. with the certainty of receiving honorable treatment.

DR. POWERS' PERIODICAL DROPS are designed for both married and single ladies, and are the very best thing known for the purpose, as they will bring on the monthly sickness in cases of obstruction from any cause, and after all other remedies of the kind have been tried in vain. Expressly for obstinate cases. Warranted as represented in every respect, or the price will be refunded. Beware of imitations! Purchase directly of Dr POWERS, 50 Lispenard-st., New-York

DR. WARD'S MAGICAL INVIGORATORS, IN the form of Pills, will, in fifteen minutes after being taken, make the recipient as vigorous as if nature had never been retarded or debilitated. To the unmarried or single, in every physical exigency, this unrivaled medicine is earnestly recommended as a complete restorative of the nervous system when manhood has been impaired. Procured of Dr. WARD, No. 50 Lispenard-st., between Broadway and Church-st. Call or send for circulars.

DR. HUNTER'S RED DROP RESTORES the vigor of youth in four days. Restores manhood to the most shattered system. No. 3 Division-st., New-York, the only place. Beware of bogus Dr. Hunters. The City is full of knaves, up to every trick to rob him of his great reputation as a skillful and reliable physician. No other office but No. 3 Division-st. Established in 1834. Eight separate rooms and a private entrance.

SOMETHING FOR EVERY LADY.—DR. WARD'S Great Female Benefactor or Golden Regulating Pills. Infallible in correcting, regulating and removing all obstructions, from whatever cause, and they will never disappoint the anxious patient. Office No. 50 Lispenard-st., near Broadway, where Dr. WARD can be consulted, confidentially, day and evening.

DRS. DE FORREST AND BROOKS, NO. 181 Franklin-st., New-York, (near West Broadway,) may be successfully consulted by ladies and gentlemen, in all cases of a delicate nature; twenty years' practice in this branch of the profession; charges low. No lady or gentleman who may be afflicted should hesitate to at once call on them. Several private rooms.

ADVICE TO LADIES.—IN ALL CASES where infallible medicines are desired, or mode of treatment that never fails, call upon Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, author of "The Married Woman's Private Medical Companion," who treats female complaints exclusively. Office No. 129 Liberty-st.

PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—DR. HUNTER has for thirty years confined his attention to diseases of a certain class, in which he has treated no less than fifty thousand cases without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without dieting or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours; cures without the dreadful consequent effects of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb unless his remedy is used. That is what he claims for it, and what no other will accomplish. Its value in this respect has become so well known that scientific men in every department of medical knowledge begin to appreciate it, for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians in regard to some pitiful patient who has exhausted the whole field of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. Its popularity is so great that there is not a quack doctor in the City that has not attacked it, and when they find their lies are not so easily swallowed, they then pretend that they can make it. It is $1 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for 15 three-cent stamps, 800 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

For Teeth Extraction without pain, by the use of NITROUS OXIDE GAS.

Office, No. 22 Bond-st.

G. Q. COLTON, JOHN ALLEN,
W. B. HURD. JOSEPH H. SMITH.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.

Teeth positively extracted without pain, by the use of nitrous oxide gas. Dr. HOYT, Dentist, No. 697 Broadway, has perfected the application of nitrous oxide to the extraction of teeth. For this purpose it is superior to chloroform, without the least risk of injury to the patient, all its effects passing away in two minutes after the operation. It causes a quiet sleep, with the most pleasing sensations, during which I extract the teeth without the patient feeling it. Feeling that all such discoveries should be used for the public good, I place it before them, and will make my charges sufficiently low that all may partake of its blessings. Teeth filled and artificial teeth inserted at my usual prices. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed.

DRS. GRIFFIN, NO. 258 GRAND-ST., N.Y., opposite Lord and Taylor's, and No. 257 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, are inserting their improved Artificial Teeth, with or without extracting the roots; full sets on gold or platina, $25; on silver or rubber, $8; partial sets (gold) per tooth, $2; silver or rubber, $1; extracting, 25c.

AUCTION SALES.

SCRANTON COAL AT AUCTION.

OFFICE OF THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN RAILROAD CO.,
No. 35 William-st., New-York, July 13, 1863.

This Company will hold their Sixth Regular Monthly Auction on WEDNESDAY, the 22d day of July, 1863, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the rooms now used as the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 26 and 28 Exchange-place, corner of William-st., at which time they will offer, by SIMEON DRAPER, Auctioneer, embracing all the usual sizes, and deliverable at their depot, Elizabethport, N. J., after the 1st of August next. They will repeat such auction sales on or about the 20th of each month during the year 1863.

TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND TONS OF FRESH-MINED SCRANTON COAL,

The sale will be positive. Each lot put up will be sold to the highest bidder; no bids, in any form whatever, being made for account of, or on behalf of the Company.

Fifty cents per ton, in bankable funds, to be paid at the time and place of sale, and the balance in like funds, on receiving the order for the Coal, which must be called for within ten days thereafter, and the Coal taken away within thirty days from the day of sale, unless navigation is obstructed. Buyers who wish, however, can have an additional thirty days for taking the delivery of their purchases, by making a further deposit of fifty cents per ton, within the ten days above specified. Interest, at 7 per cent. per annum, will in such case be charged on the balance, from the time stipulated for payment until paid; and twenty-five cents per ton to cover the expense of stocking the coal—both to be paid on delivery of order.

The other conditions of sale will be substantially those hitherto accepted by all purchasers, by private contract, of coal deliverable at Elizabethport, so far as applicable. The coal will be delivered direct from the cars on their arrival from the mines, when practicable—otherwise from the stock. These conditions will be modified to meet the wants of ocean steamers, whose arrival cannot be definitely fixed.

☞ Interruptions at the mines, and a short supply of labor, have compelled the Company to limit the quantity sold at auction to 25,000 tons monthly, until further notice. If it should be practicable for the Company to resume the original monthly quantity it will be done.

JOHN BRISBIN, President.

ARRESTS IN HARLEM.

The citizens of Harlem turned out on Thursday night, formed themselves into companies and patrolled the Twelfth Ward until daylight. A party of marauders crossed the bridge from Mott Haven during the night. They had been making threats of vengeance, stopping every respectable looking person they saw and demanding their money or their lives. Seven of them, named Thomas Armstrong, John Carr, Thomas Fay, John Nugent, Wm. Murphy, Thomas Fitzgerald and John Conniskie, were arrested and handed over to the proper authorities.

THE VERY LATEST.

All Quiet.

When our reporter left the Central Office last night at 12 o'clock all was quiet, and everything promised to remain so. The heavy rain-storm probably did much toward quieting the mob.

BROOKLYN.

All remained quiet yesterday and the night previous, although many threats had been made to sack and burn the houses of citizens, which caused a great deal of excitement, and a number of persons came to the office of the Inspector of Police for protection. The Police being all concentrated at one point, so as to act in any great emergency, it was impossible to grant all the requests that were made. Several families were notified that their residences would be visited during the night, and in some instances the families removed to other places to escape danger. No house was set on fire, however, and but few persons were molested in any way.

The measures of the authorities in maintaining order are thorough. The military have been organized, and are ready for action at any moment, and, in compliance with the proclamation of the Mayor, the citizens of the several Wards have formed companies to patrol their respective localities at night, so as to guard against incendiarism. A guard of eighty citizens was on duty in the First and Third Wards on Thursday and last nights, and a much larger number in the South Brooklyn Wards. Meetings were held last evening in all the Wards, and citizens were not wanting to offer their services. They are all provided with clubs similar to those used by the Police.

Yesterday, JOHN TRACEY, one of a crowd who assaulted colored people in Green-lane on Tuesday night, was brought before Justice PERRY on the charge of stoning the residence of JAMES HENRY WHITE, (colored,) and after driving him out, assaulting him. The complainant tried to run away, but was seized and beaten. The house was occupied by two colored families. The complainant had not offended the accused in any manner. The Justice convicted TRACEY, and fined him $20. In default of payment, he was sent to jail.

WILLIAMSBURGH.

On Thursday night a young desperado named ROGERS was arrested for attempting to incite a riot. He was intoxicated and disorderly; upon his person were found arms and ammunition. Yesterday morning Justice COLAHAN very properly gave him six months in the Penitentiary.

During Thursday evening 60 cases of prize muskets were sent from South Brooklyn to the Navy-yard for safe keeping. A large number of elevators are also moored under the guns of the vessels in the Wallabout.

At Greenpoint men are constantly drilling, and at night a large force patrols the place to aid the Police. All the iron-workers and shipbuilders are quiet.

JERSEY CITY.

There were no riotous demonstrations in this city yesterday. Between 11 and 12 o'clock on Thursday night a fire broke out in a stable in the upper part of Henderson-street, Jersey City, owned by Mr. PETER HENDERSON, gardener. There being considerable hay in the upper part, where the fire was first discovered, the flames spread rapidly, and the entire building was soon in flames. There were three horses in the barn at the time, two of which were rescued, and the other, valued at $300, was burned to death. The Fire Department was very efficient in preventing a spread of the fire. Loss about $600; no insurance. The fire is supposed to have been caused by vagabond boys.

Troops for New-York Stopped.

ALBANY, Friday, July 17.

The Fourteenth Volunteer Artillery and Fifty-fourth Militia regiments are here from Rochester, the order to proceed to New-York having been countermanded. Similar orders to the Forty-sixth and Fifty-first regiments from Onondaga, were also countermanded to-day.

THE RIOT IN BOSTON.

The Mob Spirit Squelched—Arrest of a Ringleader.

BOSTON, Friday, July 17.

The mob spirit in this city appears to have been effectually squelched, and there are no indications of its renewal.

As a precautionary measure, however, a strong military force and police patrol will guard the city to-night, and, if deemed necessary, for several nights to come.

The Constitutional Democratic Club have voted to test in the Courts of law the legality of the Conscription act.

BERNARD DOGE has been arrested for haranguing a crowd in opposition to the draft. He was locked up in default of $5,000 bail.

The Draft in Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Thursday, July 16.

The draft in Lowell, Charleston, Roxbury, Springfield and other towns has been effected in a quiet and orderly manner.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Thursday, July 16.

The quota of this city has been filled to-day. Everything passed off harmoniously, and the names of many of the drafted men were received with applause. Many prominent citizens, including a number of professional men, are among the conscripted. The draft in this district will be closed to-morrow.

The Troy Times.

TROY, N. Y., Friday, July 17.

The office of the Troy Times will be immediately reorganized, and with new type and fresh material the publication of the paper will be resumed at once.

No Riot in Hartford.

HARTFORD, Friday, July 17.

The statement furnished the Press by way of Springfield and Albany, that a riot was occurring in this city on Tuesday, was an abominable falsehood. No riot or tumult of any kind has taken place here.

A Riot Squelched in Portsmouth, N. H.

BOSTON, Friday, July 17.

Some rowdies attempted to get up a riot in Portsmouth, N. H., last night, but they were summarily squelched by the Mayor, with a posse of police and citizens. Three of the leading rioters were badly wounded. A detachment of marines from the Navy-yard, and a company of Regulars from Fort Constitution, were promptly on hand, but the mob had dispersed, and quiet has since been maintained.

The Draft in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, July 17.

The draft in the Fifteenth Ward of this city has been completed in a quiet and orderly manner.

THE DRAFT TO BE ENFORCED.

Important Circular from the War Department.

WAR DEPARTMENT, PROVOST-MARSHAL GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C., July 17, 1863.

CIRCULAR No. 48.—The operations of the draft lately ordered in the New-England and Middle States, though in most instances completed or now in progress without opposition, have in one or two cities been temporarily interrupted.

Provost-Marshals are informed that no orders have been issued countermanding the draft.

Adequate force has been ordered by the Government to the points where the proceedings have been interrupted.

Provost-Marshals will be sustained by the military forces of the country in enforcing the draft, in accordance with the laws of the United States, and will proceed to execute the orders heretofore given for the draft as rapidly as shall be practicable, by aid of the military forces ordered to cooperate with and protect them.

JAMES B. FRY, Provost-Marshal General.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

The Condition of Affairs in Suffolk—No Rebel Troops on the Blackwater—Gen. Dix, &c.

FORTRESS MONROE, Thursday, July 16.

FRED. A. ROWE, of the Ninety-ninth New-York, and commander of the army gunboat West End, is promoted from First Lieutenant to Captain. Lieut. DAVID J. BAILEY of the same regiment is also promoted to a Captaincy. Second Lieut. J. A. FLEMING, of the same regiment, is promoted to First Lieutenant.

A member of DODGE'S cavalry left Portsmouth, Va., Tuesday morning, on a visit to Suffolk. When a few miles from town he secreted his horse and passed in on foot, after waiting till dark. He obtained quarters at a friend's house. The next morning he (being in disguise) breakfasted with three rebel officers, and returned to Portsmouth that afternoon. He reports that on the Sunday following the evacuation of Suffolk by the National troops, three rebel soldiers visited Suffolk for motives of curiosity, making only a brief stay. From this time till Thursday of last week the place was visited only by officers and others having relatives in town. On Thursday of last week, Col. GRIFFIN, of Georgia, with four companies of cavalry, of nearly 100 men each, came into Suffolk and took the building formerly occupied by Gen. TERRY for his headquarters, and held possession of the town till last Sunday, when, from some unknown cause, they hastily decamped.

Immediately after our troops left Suffolk the remaining merchants raised the price of boots to $50, and everything else in proportion.

The silence of death prevails through the town. No rebel flags are displayed. The citizens have not been molested in any way. There are no troops between Suffolk and the Blackwater, and none at the Blackwater at present.

Two regiments of infantry, numbering 600 men, who were stationed there, have left for James River, having heard that the Federal troops were about to land at a farm near City Point, where there is a Confederate storehouse, containing fifteen thousand bushels of wheat.

Dr. D. M. WRIGHT, of Norfolk, charged with the shooting of Lieut. SANBORN, will have his trial next Monday, before a Military Commission, over which Maj.-Gen. KEYES will preside.

Maj.-Gen. DIX and Col. LUDLOW left for Washington, D. C., this afternoon. The personal staff of Maj.-Gen. DIX proceed with him to New-York. The corps staff for the present remain here.

It is understood that Maj.-Gen. FOSTER, from Newbern, N. C., is expected here, to take command of this department.

The flag-of-truce steamer New-York, Capt. CHISHOLM, left for City Point this afternoon, with about one hundred rebel prisoners, in charge of Major JOHN E. MULFORD.

There is no news to-day from our James River fleet.

Heavy showers have been falling here for the last twenty-four hours.

THE ESCAPE OF LEE'S ARMY.

A Resume of the Campaign—Movements of the Last Ten Days—The Council of War—The Feelings of the Soldiers.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FREDERICK, Thursday, July 16, 1863.

The campaign north of the Potomac is ended. The enemy has made an inglorious and hazardous escape across a river which we had fondly hoped was the great barrier to his retreat. The particulars of the retreat you have had in full. There remains, however, a brief history of the movements of both armies for the past ten days, yet untold. The material portions of it I will give, as nearly as possible, and the public may draw its own conclusions. My rôle is fact, not comment.

The rebel army under Gen. LEE, repulsed with sanguinary loss but not literally defeated, began its retirement from the field of Gettysburgh on Friday night, July 3. His left wing, which had fiercely assailed our right on that day, and had, in addition, occupied the village of Gettysburgh, was found to be withdrawn early on Saturday morning, when our forces, under Gen. HOWARD, advanced and occupied the place. His right wing and centre fell back a short distance on Saturday night, and on Sunday morning the rebel rear was found by a small reconnoissance to rest in the vicinity of Fairfield, eight miles from our front.

Gen. HOWARD reconnoitered the enemy's rear in person, and came suddenly upon their skirmishers, who fired, wounding severely his valuable Aid, Capt. JAMES J. GRIFFITHS, who, I regret to learn, died in Philadelphia on the 14th instant.

On Sunday morning the Sixth corps, under Gen. SEDGWICK, was ordered to make a reconnoissance in force, ascertain the position of the enemy, and as nearly as possible his line of retreat. At some time during the day Gen. SEDGWICK brought up with the enemy in force, near Fairfield. A severe skirmish followed, but Gen. SEDGWICK refrained from bringing on a general engagement.

During Sunday, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 6 P. M., after the details for burying the dead had been made, all the corps were ordered to move in three columns, as nearly as possible upon the heels of the enemy. Headquarters, itself, was ordered to move to Creagerstown that evening, twenty-two miles distant. This, I think, was before the result of Gen. SEDGWICK'S reconnoissance had become known.

Subsequently all the orders for moving were countermanded, and the various corps halted from Sunday night until Tuesday morning. Headquarters remained at a point ten miles southeast of Gettysburgh until that time.

In the meantime our cavalry were rapidly developing the line of the enemy's retreat. Instead of moving toward Chambersburgh, which is almost southwest of Gettysburgh, LEE took a shorter line of retreat, and at once seized the two upper gaps in the South Mountain, viz., the gap leading from Fairfield through Jack's Mountain to Waynesboro, known as Fountaindale Gap, and the gap through which passes the road from Emmittsburgh to Waynesboro and Greencastle, known as Monterey Gap. Then by the country roads, in a southwesterly direction toward Hagerstown.

There were then left to Gen. MEADE two routes to pursue—one to follow directly on the heels of the enemy, and fight him in these gaps, or march at once for Harmon's, Braddock's, Turner's and Crampton's Gaps, in South Mountain range—all below those occupied by the enemy.

The latter route was adopted, involving an average of march of from fifteen to twenty miles further than the enemy had to go, and on Tuesday morning, two days after LEE had fully abandoned his position, the army was put upon forced marches for the western slope of the South Mountain. The general rendezvous of the corps was Middletown, in the valley between the Catoctin and South Mountain ranges. Four or five of the army corps entered this valley by a road six or eight miles north of Frederick, while two or three of them moved around by the angle of Frederick, and thence west into the Middletown Valley.

The concentration of the different corps at Middletown was made substantially on Wednesday night—some being in advance, some at, and some just in the rear of Middletown. Headquarters, which made a single leap of thirty-five miles from Gettysburgh to Frederick on Tuesday, moved to Middletown on Wednesday.

On Thursday, July 9, the march was resumed, the Second and Twelfth corps passing down the Middletown Valley to Crampton's Gap, eight miles below Turner's Gap, through which the balance of the army passed. Thursday night's headquarters were moved to the Mountain House in the Gap, four miles west of Middletown.

On Friday, the army was all well over the mountain, well in hand for attack or defense—more so by far than when the enemy made the attack at Gettysburgh, for the corps were then twenty miles away. Thursday night, the Sixth corps, which was in advance, had pushed out four miles beyond Boonsboro, or within three miles of Funkstown, BUFORD'S cavalry having gallantly cleared the road after two days' severe fighting with STUART.

On Friday the headquarters of Gen. MEADE were established near Antietam Bridge, on the Williamsport road, three miles west of Boonsboro, and seven miles south of Hagerstown, they remaining there until Tuesday night.

From Friday until Tuesday morning, our average advance against the enemy was about three miles. During this time our line was formed on the west side of the Antietam, and we approached the enemy to within a distance ranging from half a mile to a mile and a half. Here we fell to throwing up works of defence.

The lines of the two armies were from six to eight miles long, that of the enemy being the longest. Of course, thus extended, both were very weak, and the advantage rested with the party who made a vigorous and sudden attack. I believe I am correct in saying that we never fully compelled the enemy to develop his line. We knew he had one, but its exact location, character and strength, was not, as far as I am able to learn, fully ascertained. There is good evidence, however, for the belief that the chief portion of the enemy's works were thrown up between Thursday and Monday. What little information we got of their doings tended to show this. In addition, they kept up an exceedingly stubborn front, with their pickets and skirmishers, and acted in every way just as we know they always do, when they wish to conceal some important movement—just as we do when we desire to do the same thing.

On Sunday evening a council of the Corps Commanders, also attended by the Chief Engineer, the Chief of Cavalry, and the Chief of Staff, was held. The question of attacking the enemy was discussed. Of the seven Infantry Corps Commanders, five opposed an attack and two favored it—Gens. HOWARD and WADSWORTH. In addition, Gen WARREN, Chief Engineer, and Gen. PLEASANTON, commanding the Cavalry Corps, earnestly favored a forward movement, as they had not failed to do from the first. A council was said to be necessary because it was the only way, in view of the active nature of the campaign thus far, by which a correct idea of the efficiency of each corps could be ascertained. It is worthy of note that Gens. HOWARD and WADSWORTH, who advised an attack, were the weakest in numbers.

What Gen. MEADE'S own inclination was I am not positively informed, but I think he desired to push ahead, but finally deferred to the opinion of the majority of his subordinates. A consideration which, doubtless, had some influence in delaying a movement, was the fact that reinforcements were slowly arriving, and we were growing stronger. Another idea prevailed very strongly with some of the Corps Commanders, viz., that LEE would be compelled to attack us, because of the continued high stage of the Potomac, and that he could not, so long as it lasted, obtain any reliable means of crossing; and the belief also existed that, as a matter of pride, he would not retreat, but would arbitrate again on the bloody field of another battle. I may add here that our information concerning the condition of the river and the operations of the enemy in its vicinity, was exceedingly scanty, and generally considered unreliable. One of two reports of scouts, however, which were at first discredited, afterward proved to have been well founded, viz., that LEE had obtained a number of pontoons from Winchester, and that he was building flat-boats at Williamsport.

On Sunday night, July 12, some of the Corps Commanders began, on their own responsibility, to throw up earthworks for a line of defence. This was continued through Monday and Monday night, even up to the very moment of the departure of the enemy's rear guard. It is due to Gen. WARREN, Chief Engineer, to say that this was entirely without his orders, and he strongly disapproved the proceeding, as well as condemned the position of much of the line.

The escape of LEE was reported at daylight on Tuesday morning, by a negro who came in from Williamsport. His statement was not credited, Gen. MEADE believing that the enemy was merely concentrating his forces at some point on his long line to resist an attack. But by 9 A. M. everybody was convinced. The manner and means by which he escaped you have already had in full.

Three or four facts grouped together tell the whole story. The national army took up its line on Friday and remained nearly in the same position until Tuesday; the troops were in superb spirits, and their confidence that they could whip the rebels was stronger than I have ever yet seen it, and was fully exemplified in the few sharp skirmishes that took place—all, both cavalry and infantry, resulting uniformly in our favor. The enemy had a strong line, but not one-third so formidable as ours at Gettysburgh—dangerously weak because of its length, and weaker by far on Friday, July 10, than on Monday, July 13. The enemy's means of crossing on Friday were incomplete, on Monday they were complete enough to carry him away; and yet on Monday his army was divided by the river, and in a state of trepidation for fear their hazardous movement should be discovered We were growing stronger, by additions of troops, while we lay still, and the enemy was improving the same time in recovering from the disheartenment of his defeat, and the aggregation of supplies and ammunition from Winchester. In short, delay proved of far more advantage to the enemy than to us. Add to this the fact, of which I am personally cognizant, that the soldiers received the news of LEE'S escape with feelings of bitter disappointment, and that they would rather have fought him two to one than to chase all over Virginia again after him, and the policy of "a vigorous prosecution of the war" at all times, and under all circumstances is vindicated with greater emphasis than ever heretofore.

A résumé of the campaign since the army left Fredericksburgh, I will give in my next.
